"That this respondent has no source of revenue to meet the expense of rebuilding other than its earnings.

"That, if said trestle is rebuilt of wood, the cost thereof will exceed the sum of fifteen thousand ($15,000) dollars, and if of iron or steel will exceed the sum of eighty thousand ($80,000) dollars.

"The respondent further says, that if the order of the relators set forth in said alternative writ had been forthwith and hitherto enforced, and if this respondent had received but one ($1) dollar per car for the service rendered during its last fiscal year aforesaid, the entire receipts from all its business in said year would have been but twenty-seven thousand two hundred and seventy-two ($27,272) dollars, which would have left this respondent but four thousand six hundred and eighty-eight dollars and twenty-two ($4,688.22) cents wherewith to pay the residue of its unsecured indebtedness aforesaid, then exceeding twelve thousand dollars ($12,000), or to pay the sum of ten thousand and five hundred dollars ($10,500) interest accrued upon the said bonded debt, leaving nothing for extraordinary repairs and nothing for renewals of trestles, bridges or rails.

"That this respondent is the owner of all the railway used in conducting its said business, subject only to the lien of said mortgage.

"That it is entitled to the possession and beneficial use thereof to the same extent as the owners of other property are entitled to the beneficial use thereof; that it has the right to fix the price for the use of its property by others, and the rate at which it will do business for others, subject only to the qualification that the rates so fixed shall be equal and reasonable.

"That the rate of one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) per car so fixed and collected by it as aforesaid is fair, just, equal and reasonable; that the rate of one dollar ($1) per car specified in said order of relators is grossly unfair, unjust, unequal and unreasonable, and beyond the jurisdiction and power of the said relators in that behalf.

"That the said recommendation of the said relators set forth in said alternative writ, by means whereof they seek to compel a reduction in the rate fixed by this respondent from one dollar and fifty cents (\$1.50) per car to one dollar (\$1) per car and a consequent loss in revenue of one third ($\frac{1}{3}$) of its entire earnings, was made by said relators without notice to this respondent, and without giving it any opportunity to be heard in its own behalf, and that for that reason the said recommendation is against the common rights of American citizens and is in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and is wholly void.

"And this respondent further says, that if the said order be enforced by the mandate of this court, it will take the property of this respondent against its will, without due process or any process of law, and in violation of section 1 of article 14 of the Constitution of the United States; that if the said order of the said relators be enforced against this respondent, and if its charge be reduced to one dollar ($1) per car, this respondent will be thereby deprived of the ability to pay the interest upon its said bonded indebtedness, as it has, with the consent of the State of Minnesota, contracted to do, and that any law of the said State, or any order of the said relators, or any judgment of this court, preventing the respondent from performing its said contract, when without such law, order or judgment it might have performed the same, or might thereafter perform the same, is and will be a law, order and judgment impairing the obligation of a contract, and is and will be in violation of section 10 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, and is and will be wholly void.

"This respondent, further making return, says, that the said order of the said relators, set forth in said alternative writ, will, if enforced, deprive it of its property for the use and benefit of private citizens, without making any compensation unto it as the owner thereof, in violation of section 18 of article 1 of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota, and is and will be wholly void.

"And this respondent, further making return, says that, by the provisions of section 4 of article 10 of the Constitution of said State, this respondent, being a common carrier, enjoying the right of way in pursuance of the provisions of the said Constitution, is bound to carry the mineral, agricultural and other productions of the people of said State on equal and reasonable terms; that it has always so carried the same whenever tendered or offered to it for that purpose; that the terms offered by it have always been equal and uniform to all persons and have always been reasonable in amount.

"And this respondent avers, that it is entitled to have and receive reasonable compensation for the service it is so bound to render, and that the said order of said relators, set forth in said alternative writ, assumes to fix a grossly-inadequate and unreasonable compensation therefor, is in violation of the constitutional provision last mentioned, and is wholly null and void.

"That, by reason of the matters hereinbefore set forth, this respondent has not complied, and ought not to be by the mandate of this honorable court compelled to comply, with the requirements of the recommendation and order made on the 2d day of August, 1887, and in said alternative writ set forth.

"Wherefore this respondent prays the judgment of the court that the said alternative writ may be discharged and that this respondent may be hence dismissed."

On a hearing on the return, on the 29th of January, 1889, the Company asked leave to make proof of the matters set forth in the return, at such time as the court might appoint; but the request was denied, and the Company excepted. On the motion of the attorney-general, judgment was then entered, on the application, the alternative writ and the return, for the issuing of a peremptory writ of mandamus, to review which judgment this writ of error is sued out.

The supreme court rendered an opinion stating that, as the case was similar to that of The State, ex rel. The Railroad and Warehouse Commission, v. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., before decided by it, the decision would follow the decision in that case and upon the reasons stated in the opinion filed therein.

The views and considerations applicable to that case (Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. v. State of Minnesota), which has just been decided by us, apply with even greater force to the present case, as appears by the return above set forth at length.

The Minneapolis Eastern Railway Company was organized as a corporation in June, 1878, under title 1, chapter 84, of the General Statutes of Minnesota. By § 2 of an Act of the Legislature, approved March 8, 1889 (Laws of 1889, chap. 78, p. 95), it was provided "that any railroad company or corporation organized under the title to which this is an amendment, may charge and receive for the transportation of passengers and freight on their road such reasonable rate as may be from time to time fixed by said corporation or prescribed by law." By § 8 of chapter 103 of the General Laws of Minnesota of 1875, it was provided as follows: "No railroad company shall charge, demand or receive from any person, company or corporation an unreasonable price for the transportation of persons or property, or for the hauling or storing of any freight, or for the use of its cars, or for any privilege or service afforded by it in the transaction of its business as a railroad corporation." We do not perceive that these statutory provisions constitute such a contract with the corporation, as to the fixing by it of its rates of charges, as to deprive the Legislature of its power to regulate those charges.

The decision of the Commission in the present case appears to be merely a general finding that each and every charge in excess of $1 per car for switching within the limits of the City of Minneapolis is an unreasonable and excessive compensation for the service performed. The Commission states that it made such finding after due and careful inquiry and consideration; but it does not appear that the Minneapolis Eastern Railway Company had any prior notice of any hearing at which such finding was made, or any opportunity of being heard in regard thereto; while it does appear that it asked leave of the court to make proof of the matters so set up in its return, that its request was denied, and that it excepted to such denial; and it further appears by its return that it claimed that the rate of $1 per car would be so unfair, unequal, unjust and unreasonable as to take its property against its will without due process of law.

For the reasons set forth in the other case just decided, the judgment of the Supreme Court of Minnesota, rendered February 27, 1889, awarding a peremptory writ of mandamus against the Railway Company, is reversed, and the case is remanded to that court with an instruction to take further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of this court.

Ex Parte:

In the Matter of THE LOUISVILLE UNDERWRITERS, of Louisville, Kentucky.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 488-494.)

Suits of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction—Act of March 3, 1887—libel in personam, when may be maintained—Judiciary Act—libel in admiralty against corporation—service on foreign corporation.

1. The provision in the Act of March 3, 1887, chap. 373, sec. 1, that no civil suit shall be brought before a circuit or district court against any person in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, has no application to causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.
2. In courts of admiralty, a libel in personam may be maintained for any cause within their jurisdiction, wherever a monition can be served upon the libellee, or an attachment made of any personal property or credits of his.
3. The provision of section 11, chap. 20, of the Judiciary Act of Sept. 24, 1789, restricting civil suits to the district of which the defendant was an inhabitant or in which he might be found, did not include causes of admiralty jurisdiction.
4. A libel in admiralty in personam may be maintained against a corporation by attachment of its goods in a district not within the State in which it was incorporated.
5. Where the libellee, a foreign corporation, had, in compliance with the law of Louisiana, appointed an agent at New Orleans, on whom legal process might be served, and was there served upon him, this is good service in an action at law and is equally good in admiralty.

[No. 8, Original.]

Argued March 10, 1890. Decided March 31, 1890.

PETITION for writ of prohibition to the Judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana to prohibit him from entertaining a libel in admiralty in personam against a corporation of Kentucky in a cause of contract upon a policy of insurance against perils of the seas and rivers. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. R. Beckwith, for petitioner: Jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine the subject matter in controversy between the parties to a suit.

Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 87 U. S. 12 Pet. 718 (9: 1233).

NOTE.—As to what places the jurisdiction of admiralty is confined, see note to Allen v. Newberry, 18: 110.

As to jurisdiction of state and United States courts, as to territory and offenses; ebb and flow of tide; as to criminal and civil jurisdiction,—see notes to U. S. v. Bevans, 4: 404, and to The Thomas Jefferson, 6: 358.

A corporation can have its legal home only at the place where it is located by or under its charter.

Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 869 (24: 858).

The Act authorizing prohibition was first invoked in 1795 in the case of United States v. Peters, 8 U. S. 8 Dall. 121 (1: 535).

Application for the writ of prohibition was afterward made in Ex parte Christy, 44 U. S. 8 How. 292 (11: 608); Ex parte Graham, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 548 (19: 982); Ex parte Warmouth, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 64 (21: 543), and Ex parte Easton, 95 U. S. 68 (24: 873).

The case of Ex parte Hager, 104 U. S. 520 (26: 816), seemed to kill the writ as a restraint on admiralty courts.

We submit that the reasoning in that case is most unsatisfactory, and seems intended to destroy the writ and repeal the Act of Congress.

The decree in Ex parte Hager was affirmed in The Clymene, 9 Fed. Rep. 165, 12 Fed. Rep. 346.

And the doctrine was again followed in The Alena, 14 Fed. Rep. 174.

The result of the refusal of this court to prohibit in Ex parte Hager has been the very confusion and trouble that Congress sought to avoid by the Prohibition Act.

In Ex parte Hager the court refers to Ex parte Gordon, 104 U. S. 515 (26: 814), decided at the same term.

The jurisprudence on the subject of prohibition is unsatisfactory and apparently conflicting. In Ex parte Gordon too much seems to have been inferred as the doctrine in The Char- kie, L. R. 8 Q. B. 197.

We cannot find that this case has ever been cited in England as in conflict with Smith v. Brown, L. R. 6 Q. B. 729, where that court allowed the writ prohibiting admiralty proceedings, nor with Wadsworth v. Queen of Spain and De Haber v. Queen of Portugal, 17 Q. B. 171.

The whole matter was considered by the House of Lords in Mayor of London v. Cox, L. R. 2 H. L. 239, in which the writ was allowed on the ground of the want of jurisdiction of the lower court, not of the class of cases, but of that particular case.

In Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 187 (29: 601), the authorities are collected with an indication that the writ should issue when there is no other remedy. The writ is worthless if it cannot issue on all occasions where it is a proper and adequate remedy.

The climax of the confusion wrought by admiralty courts in Pennsylvania was reached in 1883, in Ex parte Pennsylvania, 109 U. S. 175 (27: 895), in which prohibition was refused.

This court has never been before called on to determine whether it can arrest a district court usurping jurisdiction over a defendant in the face of a statutory inhibition.

The English courts seem to be called on more frequently to arrest the ecclesiastical courts than any other of their tribunals, for the reason, probably, that these courts have only a statutory jurisdiction. In this respect they are similar to our admiralty courts of first instance.

Serjeant v. Dale, L. R. 2 Q. B. Div. 558; Reg. v. Shropshire County Judge, L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 242.

Jacob says that it should issue to inferior courts of every description, whenever they attempt to take cognizance of causes over which they have no jurisdiction.

Jac. Fisher's Dig. title Prohibition.

In Darby v. Cozens, 1 T. R. 552, the king's bench sent out prohibition.

In Leman v. Goulty, 8 T. R. 8, the court allowed the writ.

A defendant ought not to be compelled to incur the delay and expense of litigation, where the court never acquired authority over the defendant.

Mr. O. B. Sansum, for respondent:

The Louisville Underwriters, a corporation created by the State of Kentucky, can be sued in the Eastern District of Louisiana.

Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 59 U. S. 18 How. 404 (15: 840); Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 38 U. S. 18 Pet. 519 (10: 274); Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 65 (20: 854); Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Gallahue, 12 Gratt. 658; Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 869 (24: 858).

This is a proceeding in personam by libel in admiralty against the Louisville Underwriters on a maritime contract. The citizenship of the parties is therefore of no consequence. The defendants, having appointed an agent within the district, authorized by them to receive service of process issued against them, and service of process being made upon that agent, they are found within the district.

That part of the Act of Congress restraining the courts from proceeding with a cause against a person not an inhabitant of the district, does not include a proceeding in admiralty in personam.

Atkins v. Disintegrating Co. 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 272 (21: 841); Cushing v. Laird, 3 Am. L. T. 50; Smith v. Miln, Abb. Adm. 378.

The prohibition does not apply to suits in admiralty.

2 Parsons, Mar. L. 686, note; 2 Parsons, Ship. and Adm. 380; Benedict, Adm. 425; The S. C. Ives, Newb. Adm. 214.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition by a corporation of the State of Kentucky for a writ of prohibition to the judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana, to prohibit him from entertaining jurisdiction of a libel in admiralty in personam, filed April 23, 1889, by the Natchez and New Orleans Packet and Transportation Company, also a corporation of Kentucky, against the petitioner, "in a cause of contract civil and maritime," upon a policy of insurance by which the petitioner insured against perils of the seas and rivers and other perils a steamboat of the libellant employed in the navigation of the Mississippi River.

By the Public Statute of Louisiana of February 26, 1877, chap. 21, no insurance company organized under the laws of any other State shall take risks or transact any business through an agent in Louisiana, without having filed in the office of the secretary of state a certified copy of a vote of its directors, appointing such an agent there to transact business and to take risks, accompanied by a warrant of appointment from the company, containing an express consent that service of legal process on him shall be as valid as if served on the company.

By a copy of the record of the proceedings in the district court, annexed to the return to the rule to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue, it appears that the libellee had filed with the secretary of state of Louisiana a copy of a vote of its directors, as well as a warrant of appointment, appointing William M. Railey its attorney at New Orleans, as required by the Statute of Louisiana; that the policy sued on was signed by the libellee's president and secretary at Louisville in the State of Kentucky, was not to be binding until countersigned by its authorized agent at New Orleans, and was countersigned by Railey; that a citation to the libellee was issued by the district court, and served by the marshal upon Railey in person; that a motion to quash the libel, and an exception to it, upon the ground, among others, that neither party was an inhabitant of the Eastern District of Louisiana and that the libellee had no property or credits within the district, were overruled by the district court, and the libellee ordered to answer; and that the libellee thereupon answered, and took depositions under commission.

Before the cause had been brought to a hearing, the petition for a writ of prohibition was presented to this court.

It is admitted that the district courts of the United States, sitting in admiralty, have jurisdiction of the matter of the libel. New England M. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 1 [20: 90]. But it is argued, in support of the prohibition, that no libel in personam can be sustained against a corporation in a district not within the State in which it is incorporated; and this argument is rested on the latter part of the following provision in the Act of March 3, 1887, chap. 373, § 1:

"But no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a circuit or district court; and no civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts against any person by any original process of proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant." 24 Stat. 552.

A brief reference to previous Acts of Congress and decisions of this court makes it clear that this provision has no application to causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.

By the ancient and settled practice of courts of admiralty, a libel in personam may be maintained for any cause within their jurisdiction, wherever a monition can be served upon the libellee, or an attachment made of any personal property or credits of his; and this practice has been recognized and upheld by the rules and decisions of this court. Rule 2 in Admiralty; Manro v. Almeida, 23 U. S. 10 Wheat. 473 [6: 369]; Atkins v. Disintegrating Co. 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 272 [21: 841]; New England Ins. Co. v. Detroit & C. Steam Nav. Co. 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 807 [21: 846]; Cushing v. Laird, 107 U. S. 69 [27: 891]; Devco Mfg. Co., Petitioner, 108 U. S. 401 [27: 764].

The judgment, delivered at October Term, 1873, in Atkins v. Disintegrating Co., just cited, is really decisive of this case.

The question there presented was the construction of that provision of the Judiciary Act of September 24, 1789, chap. 20, § 11, by which, after defining the jurisdiction of the circuit courts in "suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity," in which the United States were plaintiffs, or an alien was a party, or the suit was between a citizen of the State where it was brought and a citizen of another State; and also defining the criminal jurisdiction of the circuit and district courts,—it was provided as follows:

"But no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a circuit or district court; and no civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts against an inhabitant of the United States by any original process in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, or in which he shall be found at the time of serving the writ." 1 Stat. 79.

Upon a consideration of the Acts of Congress upon the subject, and especially of other sections of the Judiciary Act of 1789, of which section 9 conferred upon the district courts "exclusive original cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction," and jurisdiction concurrent with the circuit courts of certain "suits at common law" by the United States (1 Stat. 77); section 21 authorized "final decrees in a district court in causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction" to be reviewed in the circuit court on appeal, and section 22 authorized "final decrees and judgments in civil actions in a district court" to be reviewed in the circuit court by writ of error (1 Stat. 88, 84); it was demonstrated that the provision of section 11, above quoted, restricting "civil suits" to the district of which the defendant was an inhabitant or in which he might be found, did not include causes of admiralty jurisdiction; and it was therefore adjudged that a libel in admiralty in personam might be maintained against a corporation by attachment of its goods in a district not within the State in which it was incorporated.

The provisions of sections 9, 11, 21 and 22 of the Judiciary Act of 1789, above quoted, were re-enacted in substantially the same words in the Revised Statutes. Rev. Stat. §§ 563, cls. 4, 8; 629, cls. 1-3; 631, 633, 739.

The provision of section 11 of the Act of 1789, embodied in § 739 of the Revised Statutes, was re-enacted with no material alteration in the Act of March 3, 1875, chap. 137, § 1, as follows:

"But no person shall be arrested in one district for trial in another in any civil action before a circuit or district court; and no civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, or in which he shall be found at the time of serving such process or commencing such proceeding." 18 Stat. 470.

The only changes (beyond the substitution of "person" for "inhabitant of the United States") consisted in inserting, in the middle of the sentence, after the words "any original process," the words "or proceeding;" and in substituting, at the end of the sentence, for the words "serving the writ," the words "serving such process or commencing such proceeding." These changes in no way extended the meaning of the leading words "civil action" and "civil suit;" but merely affected the mode of commencing such action or suit, and were probably intended to cover actions at law commenced otherwise than by process, according to the practice, pleadings and forms of proceeding in the courts of the States, which had been made applicable to the circuit and district courts of the United States by the Act of 1872, re-enacted in the Revised Statutes. Act of June 1, 1872, chap. 255, § 5 (17 Stat. 197); Rev. Stat. § 914.

The provision of the Act of 1887 on which the petitioner relies differs from the corresponding provision of the Act of 1875 in two particulars only:

1st. In the clerical mistake, "process of proceeding" for "process or proceeding," which has been set right by the Act of 1888 correcting the enrolment of the Act of 1887. Act of August 18, 1888, chap. 866, § 1 (25 Stat. 433).

2d. In striking out the last clause, permitting civil suits to be brought in the district in which the defendant is found at the time of service, and thus confining them to the district of which he is an inhabitant. This change, far from weakening the reason of the decision in Atkins v. Disintegrating Co., above cited, greatly strengthens it.

Courts of admiralty are established for the settlement of disputes between persons engaged in commerce and navigation, who, on the one hand, may be absent from their homes for long periods of time, and, on the other hand, often have property or credits in other places. In all nations, as observed by an early writer, such courts "have been directed to proceed at such times, and in such manner, as might best consist with the opportunities of trade, and least hinder or detain men from their employments." Zouch, Adm. Jur. 141. In the same spirit this court has more than once said: "Courts of admiralty have been found necessary in all commercial countries, for the safety and convenience of commerce, and the speedy decision of controversies, where delay would often be ruin." The Genesee Chief, 53 U. S. 12 How. 448, 454 [13: 1058, 1061]; New England M. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 1, 24 [20: 90, 97]. To compel suitors in admiralty (when the ship is abroad and cannot be reached by a libel in rem) to resort to the home of the defendant, and to prevent them from suing him in any district in which he might be served with a summons or his goods or credits attached, would not only often put them to great delay, inconvenience and expense, but would in many cases amount to a denial of justice.

In the present case, the libellee had, in compliance with the law of Louisiana, appointed an agent at New Orleans, on whom legal process might be served, and the monition was there served upon him. This would have been a good service in an action at law in any court of the State or of the United States in Louisiana. Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 59 U. S. 18 How. 404 [15: 451]; Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369 [24: 853]; New England Ins. Co. v. Woodworth, 111 U. S. 188, 146 [28: 879, 881]. And no reason has been or can be suggested why it should not be held equally good in admiralty.

The District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana having jurisdiction both of the cause and of the parties, the writ of prohibition is denied.

A similar decision was made in the case, argued and decided at the same time, No. 9 Original, Ex parte The St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company of St. Paul, Minnesota, which differed only in the petitioner and libellee being a corporation of Minnesota.

THE MERCHANTS' MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 515-527.)

Review of state judgment—remedy of creditors to reach unpaid subscriptions to stock—Missouri Act of 1879—did not increase stockholder's liability—provision of charter—new remedy—power of Legislature—remedy may be altered.

1. This court has jurisdiction to review a state judgment, where the case presents the question whether a certain state statute, to which that judgment gave effect, impaired the obligation of a contract arising out of a subscription by plaintiff in error to the stock of an insurance company created by the laws of Missouri.
2. Although prior to the Missouri Act of 1866 no specific remedy was prescribed for creditors to reach the unpaid subscriptions of stockholders, yet creditors could obtain the same relief by suit in equity.
3. The Missouri Act of 1879 did not increase the liability of the stockholder. He was liable by virtue of his subscription and his notes to the company to pay the whole amount of his subscription. The Act of 1879 did not enlarge this liability; it authorized an execution only for the unpaid balance of his stock.
4. While, under the original charter of the company, he was liable to a suit in equity, under the Statute of 1879 he was liable to be proceeded against by notice and motion in the action in which judgment was rendered against the corporation. In either mode he had opportunity to make defense.
5. The provision in the company's charter, that "the balance due on each share shall be subject to the call of the directors," did not give the stockholder the right, as between himself and the company, or as between him and the company's creditors, to withhold payment of the balance due from him until the necessities of the company required payment in full for the shares subscribed.

6. His undertaking was to pay each and all of his notes on demand, and it was entirely competent for the Legislature to give the creditors of the company a new or additional remedy by which this undertaking could be enforced in their behalf,—such remedy not increasing the debtor's liability.
7. The condition is implied in every grant of corporate existence that the corporation shall be subject to such reasonable regulations, in respect to the general conduct of its affairs, as the Legislature may, from time to time, prescribe, which do not materially interfere with or obstruct the substantial enjoyment of the privileges the State has granted, and serve only to secure the ends for which the corporation was created.
8. Whatever belongs merely to the remedy may be altered according to the will of the State, provided the alteration does not impair the obligation of the contract.

Submitted Mar. 19, 1890. Decided Mar. 31, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri, to review a judgment of the St. Louis Court of Appeals which affirmed the judgment of the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis, directing an execution to be issued against Hill, the plaintiff's testator, for the unpaid balance upon his share of the capital stock of the Excelsior Insurance Company.

Affirmed.

Reported below, 1 West. Rep. 424, 86 Mo. 466, 12 Mo. App. 148.

Statement by Mr. Justice Harlan:

This writ of error brings up for re-examination a judgment of the Supreme Court of Missouri, and presents the question whether a certain statute, to which that judgment gave effect, impaired the obligation of a contract arising out of a subscription by Britton A. Hill to the stock of an Insurance Company created by the laws of Missouri.

By the second section of an Act of the Missouri Legislature, approved March 3, 1857, creating the Washington Insurance Company, it was provided in reference to subscriptions to its stock, that "at the time of subscribing there shall be paid on each share one dollar, and nine dollars more within twenty days after the first election of directors; if any stockholder fails to make such payment, such stockholder shall forfeit the amount paid on such stock at the time of subscribing; the balance due on each share shall be subject to the call of the directors, and the said company shall not be authorized to make any policy or contract of insurance until the whole amount of shares subscribed shall be actually paid in, or secured to be paid on demand by approved notes or mortgages on real estate." The same Act contained the following provisions: "This Act shall be, and the same is hereby declared, a public Act, and the same shall be deemed and construed as such; and the corporation established by this Act shall be, and the same is hereby, exempted from the operation of sections seven, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen and eighteen of article 1st of the Act entitled 'An Act Concerning Corporations,' approved November 23, 1855; and said sections shall be deemed as repealed, so far as the same concerns the corporation hereby established." Laws of Mo. 1856-57, pp. 544, 545, §§ 2, 8.

Sections seven, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen and eighteen of the above Act of 1855, from the operation of which the Washington Insurance Company was thus exempted, are as follows:

"§ 7. The charter of every corporation that shall hereafter be granted by the Legislature shall be subject to alteration, suspension and repeal in the discretion of the Legislature."

"§ 18. In all corporations hereafter created by the Legislature, unless otherwise specified in their charter, in case of deficiency of corporate property, or estate liable to execution, the individual property, rights and credits of every member of the copartnership, or body politic, having a share or shares therein, shall be liable to be taken on execution, to an additional amount equal to that of the amount of his stock, and no more, for all debts of the corporation contracted during his ownership of such stock; and such liability shall continue, notwithstanding any subsequent transfer of such stock, for the term of one year after the record of the transfer thereof on the books of the corporation, and for the term of six months after judgment recovered against such corporation, in any suit commenced within the year aforesaid: Provided, That in every such case the officer holding the execution shall first ascertain and certify upon such execution that he cannot find corporate property or estate.

"§ 14. In such case, the officer may cause the property of such stockholder to be levied upon by execution in the same manner as if the same were against him individually, after giving him forty-eight hours' previous notice of his intention, and the amount of the debt or deficiency, if he resides within the county, or if not within the county, to his agent, if he have any within the county, otherwise to the clerk or cashier or some other officer of the corporation, unless such stockholder, his agent, or the clerk or other officer, on demand and notice as aforesaid, shall disclose and show to the execution creditor, or the said officer, corporate property or estate subject to execution sufficient to satisfy said execution and all fees.

"§ 15. Such creditor, after demand and notice as mentioned in the preceding section, at his election, may have an action against any such stockholder or stockholders, on whom such demand and notice may have been served, jointly or severally, or so many of them as he may elect, to recover of him, or them, individually, the amount of his execution and costs, or of the deficiency as aforesaid, not exceeding the amount of the stock held by such stockholder or stockholders.

"§ 16. The clerk, or other officer having charge of the books of any corporation, on demand of any officer holding any execution against the same, shall furnish the officer with the names, places of residence (so far as to him known) and the amount of liability of every person liable as aforesaid."

"§ 18. Every corporation hereafter created shall give notice annually in some newspaper printed in the county where the corporation is established, and in case no paper is printed therein, then in the nearest paper, of the amount of all the existing debts of the corporation, which notice shall be signed by the president and a majority of the directors; and if any of the said corporators shall fail so to do, all the stockholders of the corporation shall be jointly and severally liable for all the debts of the company then existing, and for all that shall be contracted before such notice shall be given." Rev. Stat. Mo. 1865, p. 372, 373.

By an Act of the Legislature of Missouri, approved February 9, 1859, the Excelsior Insurance Company was created. That Act is as follows:

"§ 1. That an insurance company be, and is hereby, established in the City of St. Louis, to be known by the name and style of the 'Excelsior Insurance Company,' the stockholders of which are herety declared a body corporate and politic, with the same amount of capital stock and period of existence, and the same rights, privileges and restrictions, as were conferred upon the 'Washington Insurance Company' of St. Louis, by an Act of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, approved March the third, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, with the exception of so much of section eight of said Act as declares the same a public Act, and exempts said corporation from the operation of section eighteen of article first of the Act, entitled 'An Act Concerning Corporations,' approved November the twenty-third, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.

"§ 2. James H. Lucas, Henry L. Patterson, Thomas Stein, Morris Collins, James G. Brown and John C. Porter, or any three of them, or such person or persons as they may appoint, are hereby constituted commissioners to open books for subscription to the capital stock, in the same manner as is prescribed in the charter of said Washington Insurance Company. This Act to take effect from and after its passage." Sess. Acts Mo. 1859, p. 74.

Section 6, article 8, of the Constitution of Missouri, which went into effect in 1865, provides as follows: "Dues from private corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law; but in all cases each stockholder shall be individually liable, over and above the stock by him or her owned, and any amount unpaid thereon, in a further sum at least equal in amount to such stock."

In order to give effect to this constitutional provision, the Legislature, by an Act which went into effect March 19, 1866, amended section 18 of the above Act of 1855 so as to read as follows:

"§ 11. If any execution shall have been issued against the property or effects of a corporation, and if there cannot be found whereon to levy such execution, then such execution may be issued against any of the stockholders to an extent equal in amount to the amount of stock by him or her owned, together with any amount unpaid thereon: Provided always, That no execution shall issue against any stockholder except upon an order of the court in which the action, suit or other proceeding shall have been brought or instituted, made upon motion in open court, after sufficient notice in writing to the persons sought to be charged; and upon such motion, such court may order execution to issue accordingly." Rev. Stat. Mo. 1866, p. 328.

In July, 1866, Hill subscribed for 64 shares, of the par value of $100 for each share, of the stock of the Excelsior Insurance Company, paying part cash and giving to the company four notes for $750 each, dated respectively July 20, 1866, and one note dated July 11, 1866, for $1,800. Each one of these notes was payable on demand to the order of the insurance company. At the commencement of these proceedings his stock had become reduced to 37 shares.

The Constitution of Missouri of 1875 provided that "dues from private corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law, but in no case shall any stockholder be individually liable in any amount over or above the amount of stock owned by him or her." Art. 13, § 9.

In 1879 the Statutes of Missouri were revised, and the above section of the Act of 1866 was amended so as to read as follows:

"§ 736. If any execution shall have been issued against any corporation, and there cannot be found any property or effects whereon to levy the same, then such execution may be issued against any of the stockholders to the extent of the amount of the unpaid balance of such stock by him or her owned: Provided, always, That no execution shall issue against any stockholder, except upon an order of the court in which the action, suit or other proceedings shall have been brought or instituted, made upon motion in open court, after sufficient notice in writing to the persons sought to be charged; and upon such motion, such court may order execution to issue accordingly: And provided further, That no stockholder shall be individually liable in any amount over and above the amount of stock owned."

The present action was brought under the Statute last quoted. It was commenced by notice to Hill on behalf of the Merchants' Mutual Insurance Company that it would move the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis for execution against him, as a stockholder of the Excelsior Insurance Company, for the balance unpaid upon his thirty-seven shares of the capital stock of the Excelsior Insurance Company. The proceeding was docketed as a suit against that company by the Merchants' Insurance Company. Hill appeared, and upon the trial of the action the court found that the unpaid balance on said shares was $2,127.50. For that amount, with costs, an execution was directed to be issued against Hill. Upon appeal to the St. Louis Court of Appeals that judgment was affirmed, and the judgment of the Court of Appeals was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the State. 12 Mo. App. 148; 86 Mo. 466 [1 West. Rep. 424].

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error contends that the Act creating the Excelsior Insurance Company was a private Act, and its charter exempted from alteration, suspension or repeal by subsequent legislation; that its stockholders were exempted from the levy of an execution upon their individual property at the instance of a judgment creditor of the corporation in case of a deficiency of corporate property, and from actions at law by creditors; that the rights of its stockholders were not affected by subsequent legislation of a general nature; and that the method of collecting unpaid stock, specially provided for in the company's charter, was exclusive of any other remedy, except that supplied by a court of equity.

The assignment of error which gives this court jurisdiction to re-examine the judgment of the state court is, that when the testator of the plaintiff in error purchased the stock of the Excelsior Insurance Company he entered into a contractual relation, not only with the company, but with the State, both as to the method of paying for his stock, and in respect to the extent of his liability; and that the rights vested in him by the contract were taken away, and therefore the obligations of his contract were impaired, by the legislation of 1879, the validity of which was sustained by the court below.

We assume, in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court of Missouri—and that view is favorable to the plaintiff in error—that the Excelsior Insurance Company was not subject to the seventh section of the General Statute of November 23, 1855, declaring that the charters of all corporations thereafter created should be granted subject to alteration, suspension and repeal in the discretion of the Legislature; and that the other sections of that Statute, specially named in the charter of the insurance company, were to stand as repealed so far as that company was concerned. The result of this construction of the charter of the insurance company is, that prior to the passage of the Act of 1866, which took effect March 19, 1866, no specific remedy was prescribed for creditors seeking to reach the unpaid subscriptions of stockholders. But it was open to them to proceed by a suit in equity. That such a remedy could be used without violating any provision of the company's charter, or any right of a stockholder, cannot be doubted. But neither the company nor its stockholders had any vested right in that particular remedy. They could only insist that the extent of their liability should not be increased. The Act of 1866 authorized an execution to be issued against a stockholder "to an extent equal in amount to the amount of stock by him or her owned, together with any amount unpaid thereon," where no property or effects of the corporation could be found. This Statute, if given a retrospective operation, certainly did increase the liability of those who became stockholders in the Excelsior Insurance Company prior to its passage. But the defendant in error contends that it was applicable to all who, like Hill, became stockholders after its passage. Waiving any consideration of this question, it is certain that the Act of 1879, under which this action was instituted, did not increase Hill's liability. He was liable, by virtue of his original subscription and by his notes to the company, to pay the whole amount of his subscription. The Statute of 1879 did not enlarge this liability, for it authorized an execution against a stockholder, where there was no corporate property to be levied on, only "to the extent of the amount of the unpaid balance of such stock by him or her owned." While, under the original charter of the company, he was liable to a suit in equity, under the Statute of 1879 he was liable to be proceeded against by notice and motion in the action in which judgment was rendered against the corporation. In either mode he had opportunity to make defense.

It is, however, contended that under the charter of the company the stockholder was not bound to pay any amount beyond ten dollars on each share except upon a call of the directors, and that the provision allowing an execution for the unpaid balance, pursuant to the judgment of the court, was a change of the contract. The provision in the company's charter, that "the balance due on each share shall be subject to the call of the directors," did not give the stockholder the right, as between himself and the company, or as between him and the company's creditors, to withhold payment of the balance due from him until the necessities of the company required payment in full for the shares subscribed. The company was forbidden to make any policy or contract of insurance "until the whole amount of shares subscribed shall be actually paid in, or secured to be paid on demand, by approved notes or mortgages on real estate." Hence Hill executed demand notes, with surety, for the entire balance due on his original subscription. The authority of the company to call for the payment of those notes, by installments, did not give him a right, as a part of his contract, to make payment in that particular mode. His undertaking was to pay each and all of his notes on demand, and it was entirely competent for the Legislature, as a regulation of the business and affairs of the company, to give its creditors a new or additional remedy by which this undertaking could be enforced in their behalf—such remedy not increasing the debtor's liability. As said by this court in Chicago Life Ins. Co. v. Needles, 113 U. S. 574, 580 [28: 1084, 1087], the condition is implied in every grant of corporate existence that "the corporation shall be subject to such reasonable regulations, in respect to the general conduct of its affairs, as the Legislature may, from time to time, prescribe, which do not materially interfere with or obstruct the substantial enjoyment of the privileges the State has granted, and serve only to secure the ends for which the corporation was created."

Upon the point made by the plaintiff in error, that under the original charter of the company Hill was liable only to a suit in equity, to which all the stockholders could be made parties, and in which he could compel contribution from other stockholders, whereas under the Statute of 1879 he could be proceeded against alone, it is sufficient to say that if neither the Statute of 1866 nor that of 1879 had been passed, he could have been sued at law upon the notes he gave the company. The proceeding authorized by the Statute of 1879 is, in effect, a suit upon his notes for the amount due thereon. His liability to pay that amount has no such connection with the liability of other stockholders as to exempt him from a suit at law to compel him to pay the sum he agreed to pay. Hatch v. Dana, 101 U. S. 205 [25: 885]. The Statute restricts any judgment against him to the amount he originally assumed to pay. Consequently, no substantial right of his has been violated. "Whatever belongs merely to the remedy may be altered according to the will of the State, provided the alteration does not impair the obligation of the contract." Bronson v. Kinzie, 42 U. S. 1 How. 811, 816 [11: 148, 145]; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 122, 200 [4: 529]; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 130 U. S. 747, 755 [30: 825, 828], and cases there cited.

Judgment affirmed.

JAMES W. ELWELL, Trustee, by the NATIONAL CITY BANK, of Ottawa, Illinois, Appl.,

v.

WILLIAM R. FOSDICK ET AL., Trustees.

Release by trustee binds those he represents—trustee for bondholders—evidence dehors the record, such as release of errors, received—provisions of mortgage—one who appeals in name of trustee, bound by trustee's preceding acts.

1. A written release by a trustee of all errors had or committed in and concerning a decree, and releasing and waiving his right as such trustee to appeal from the decree in an action to foreclose a mortgage made by a railroad company to secure its bonds, in which such trustee was a party defendant as being a trustee in a second mortgage given by the company, binds all the bondholders represented by him as such trustee.
2. The trustee represented the bondholders not only in the proceedings which resulted in the entry of the decree, so that the bondholders were not necessary parties, but he also bound them by his release of errors, his relations to them not having changed between the time of the entry of the decree and the time of the execution of the release.
3. This court is compelled, as all courts are, to receive evidence dehors the record affecting their proceedings in a case before them on error or appeal, such as the death or transfer of the interest of one of the parties. A release of errors may be filed as a bar to the writ.
4. Where, by the provisions of the mortgage to the trustee, he could proceed to collect the mortgage debt, by litigation or otherwise, only at the request of the holders of a majority of the bonds, and the majority of such holders desired the litigation to cease, the trustee was authorized to put an end to it, and his waiver of an appeal binds all who act in his name as trustee.

5. Where a bank was not a party to the suit, and its right to appeal depended entirely upon the trustee, and the circuit court allowed it to appeal in the name of the trustee, the bank is bound by all the preceding acts of the trustee, done in good faith.

Argued Mar. 19, 20, 1890. Decided Mar. 31, 1890.

A PPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois in a suit to foreclose a mortgage.

On motion to dismiss. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Will-H. Lyford, for motion to dismiss:

This appeal should be dismissed because it seeks to reverse a joint decree against several defendants, while only one defendant is prosecuting this appeal.

Masterson v. Herndon, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 416 (19: 958); Owings v. Kincannon, 82 U. S. 7 Pet. 899 (8: 727); Simpson v. Greeley, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 152 (22: 838); Estes v. Trubus, 128 U. S. 225 (32: 487); Piebleman v. Packard, 108 U. S. 14 (27: 634); Wilson v. L. & F. Ins. Co. 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 140 (9: 1082).

This appeal should be dismissed, because its prosecution is barred by a written release of errors and waiver of right of appeal, signed by Elwell, trustee, in whose name the appeal was granted.

Sage v. Central R. Co. 99 U. S. 384, 346 (25: 394, 398); Shaw v. Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. 100 U. S. 605, 611 (25: 757, 759); Barnes v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 122 U. S. 1 (31: 1128); First Nat. Bank v. Shedd, 121 U. S. 74, 86 (30: 877, 881); Dakota Co. v. Glidden, 118 U. S. 222, 225 (28: 961, 982); Ex parte Cutting, 94 U. S. 14, 21 (24: 49, 51); Ex parte Cockcroft, 104 U. S. 578 (26: 856).

Messrs. Charles M. Osborn and Samuel A. Lynde, in opposition:

The decree from which this appeal is prosecuted was not a joint decree within the meaning of the rule requiring all of the parties against whom a joint decree shall be rendered to join in the appeal.

Simpson v. Greeley, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 157 (22: 338); Germain v. Mason, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 259 (20: 392); Forgay v. Conrad, 47 U. S. 6 How. 201 (12: 404); Brewster v. Wakefield, 68 U. S. 22 How. 128 (16: 304); Milner v. Meek, 95 U. S. 253 (24: 444); Norwich & W. R. Co. v. Johnson, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 8 (21: 118); Todd v. Daniels, 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 523 (10: 554).

The order of the circuit court allowing this appeal amounts to a sufficient severance of the parties to authorize the prosecution of this appeal in the name of Elwell alone.

Masterson v. Herndon, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 418 (19: 954); O'Doud v. Russell, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 402 (20: 857); Sage v. Central R. Co. 99 U. S. 412 (23: 935).

These releases of error were not necessary parts of the record on this appeal, but have become material because of this motion and may be filed.

Dakota Co. v. Glidden, 118 U. S. 222 (28: 961).

Elwell had no power or authority as trustee in the second mortgage to release errors and to waive the right to appeal.

184 U. S.

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

This case grows out of proceedings which took place in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, in the suit of William R. Fosdick and James D. Fish, mortgagees in trust, against The Chicago, Danville & Vincennes Railroad Company and others, wherein this court, in Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. v. Fosdick, and Same v. Huidekoper, 106 U. S. 47 [27: 47], on the appeal of the railroad company, had under review decrees made by the circuit court in the cause.

The suit was brought March 27, 1875, to foreclose a mortgage executed by the Company, on March 10, 1869, to Fosdick and Fish as trustees, to secure $2,500,000 of bonds. The defendants in the bill were the railroad company and James W. Elwell, one of the two trustees (the other being the said James D. Fish), in a second mortgage executed by the company December 16, 1872, to secure $1,000,000 of convertible bonds. Elwell, as such trustee, filed a cross-bill, May 17, 1875, setting up a default in the payment of interest on the bonds secured by the second mortgage, and praying for a foreclosure of it. A receiver was appointed May 20, 1875, and an amended bill was filed by Fosdick and Fish September 14, 1875. Answers were filed by the company and by Elwell to the amended bill, and answers to the cross-bill of Elwell by the company and by Fosdick and Fish. The cause was referred to a master, whose report, made June 24, 1876, sustained the allegations of the original bill, and fixed the amount due under the mortgage to Fosdick and Fish and also that due under the mortgage to Elwell. A decree of foreclosure and sale was entered on the 5th of December, 1876. The property was sold under that decree by a master, February 7, 1877, and was purchased by Huidekoper and others, a committee of the first-mortgage bondholders, the purchase price being $1,450,000. The purchasers paid in cash $362,500, being one fourth of their bid, and petitioned the court on February 17, 1877, to be allowed to discharge the remainder of their bid by surrendering $2,815,000 of the first-mortgage bonds held by them, and to be let into possession of the property. On the 23d of February, 1877, Elwell answered this petition, denying the right of the purchasers to a deed, on the ground that, as the statute of Illinois provided for a redemption at any time within fifteen months after the sale, he ought to be allowed that time in which to redeem from the sale. The master made to the court a report of the sale, the court confirmed the report on the 12th of April, 1877, and, on the 16th of April, 1877, the master reported that he had executed a deed to the purchasers. They conveyed the property, on the 28th of August, 1877, to The Chicago and Nashville Railroad Company, a corporation which had been organized on the 7th of February, 1877, and which, on the 28th of August, 1877, was consolidated with an Indiana corporation, by the name of The Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company.

The decree of foreclosure made December 5, 1876, was reversed by this court, by its decision in 106 U. S., and the mandate thereon, dated May 17, 1882, was filed in the circuit court on the 25th of May, 1882. The grounds of the reversal were, that it was not shown that default in the payment of interest on the bonds had been continued for six months prior to the filing of the bill, nor that the trustee received a written request from the holders of a majority of the bonds to commence proceedings for foreclosure, as provided by the terms of the first mortgage.

After the cause returned to the circuit court, and on the 7th of July, 1882, Fosdick and Fish filed an amended and supplemental bill, setting forth (1) that there had been default, continued more than six months after presentation and demand, in the payment of interest coupons on the first-mortgage bonds; and (2) that a majority of the bondholders, being the holders of more than 92 per cent of all the outstanding bonds, had in writing demanded that the trustees immediately declare the principal of the bonds due and payable, and obtain a final decree to appropriate the net proceeds of the sale of the property, as such sale was confirmed, to the payment of the first-mortgage bonds and interest thereon. But immediate foreclosure for the full amount of principal and interest was prayed for. The Chicago, Danville & Vincennes Railroad Company demurred to the amended and supplemental bill, and petitioned the court to appoint a receiver to take possession of the property out of the hands of The Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad Company.

The Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company was made a party defendant to the suit. It answered the amended and supplemental bill, and on the 6th of December, 1882, filed its cross-bill against The Chicago, Danville & Vincennes Railroad Company, Fosdick and Fish, trustees, and Elwell, trustee. The material allegations of this cross-bill were as follows: The purchasers at the master's sale were bona fide purchasers at an open sale, which was attended with much competition, and the property brought a full and fair price. The sale was reported by the master and was confirmed by the court, and neither The Chicago, Danville & Vincennes Railroad Company nor Elwell had ever filed exceptions to the report or appealed from the decree of confirmation. Nearly all of the $362,500 paid by the purchasers at the master's sale had been paid out to creditors of The Chicago, Danville & Vincennes Railroad Company, under decrees of the court. A large part of that amount was contributed by the holders of Indiana Division bonds, who were strangers to the record and innocent purchasers for value. On September 1, 1877, The Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company issued, negotiated and put in general circulation $8,000,000 of 6 per cent bonds, secured by a trust deed on the property so purchased at the sale; and on December 1, 1877, issued $1,000,000 of income bonds. The Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company had also issued $8,000,000 of capital stock; and by consolidation with The Danville & Grape Creek Railroad Company had incurred an additional bonded debt of $750,000. By means of certain perpetual leases The Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company had acquired additional railroad, and had also built certain branches, and procured additional rolling stock. The appeal from the foreclosure decree of December 5, 1876, was not prayed until October 30, 1878, and was not perfected until January 29, 1879. During the five years which intervened between the purchase of the property by Huidekoper and others, on the 7th of February, 1877, and March 6, 1882, when the decree of foreclosure of December 5, 1876, was reversed by this court, the $4,000,000 of bonds and $8,000,000 of capital stock issued by The Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company, on the faith of its title to the property, had been largely dealt in on the stock exchanges of Boston and New York, and had so far changed ownership that, on March 6, 1882, when the decree of foreclosure was reversed, nearly all the bonds and a majority of the stock were owned by strangers to the litigation, who had purchased in good faith for full value.

The prayer of the cross-bill was that the title of The Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company, and of its stockholders and bondholders, to the property be forever quieted, as against The Chicago, Danville & Vincennes Railroad Company, Fosdick and Fish, and Elwell; and that it be decreed that The Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company had acquired a good title in fee simple absolute as against each of the defendants.

Answers were filed to the cross-bill by each of the defendants, and replications to such answers; and, on a reference, a master took a large amount of testimony on the issues joined, and filed the same, with his report, on the 9th of June, 1884.

On the 24th of June, 1884, The National City Bank of Ottawa, Illinois, a corporation, filed a petition as the owner and holder of $14,000 of the convertible mortgage bonds of The Chicago, Danville & Vincennes Railroad Company, secured by the mortgage to Fish and Elwell, praying to be made a party defendant to the suit, and to be allowed to file an answer in the suit, on the ground that Elwell was not properly protecting the rights of the bank in the premises.

The case was heard on all the pleadings and proofs, before Judge Blodgett, and on the 30th of June, 1884, a decree was entered finding the equities of the cause in favor of the original plaintiffs as against all the defendants except The Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company, and also finding the equities of the cause in favor of the latter company by reason of the matters set forth in its cross-bill, as against all of the defendants thereto. The decree also contained the following provisions: "By virtue of the original deed of Henry W. Bishop, master in chancery, dated April 16, 1877, to Huidekoper, Shannon and Dennison, and the confirmation thereof by this court, and by the subsequent conveyance by said Huidekoper, Shannon and Dennison to the Chicago & Nashville Railroad Company, on August 28, 1877, and the subsequent consolidation between the Chicago & Nashville Railroad Company and the State Line & Covington Railroad Company, on August 28, 1877, as set forth in its cross-bill, the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company acquired a perfect and indefeasible title to all and singular the Illinois Division of said Chicago, Danville & Vincennes railroad, as hereinbefore specifically described, and also as described in said master's deed of April 16, 1877, reference being thereto had, free and clear of all lien, claim, title or equity of any kind whatever of said William R. Fosdick, James D. Fish, James W. Elwell, R. Biddle Roberts and the Chicago, Danville & Vincennes Railroad Company, or either of them, or any of the bondholders, stockholders or creditors of said Chicago, Danville & Vincennes Railroad Company, or any persons claiming by or under it or any of said trustees.

And it is further ordered that the petition of the National City Bank of Ottawa, Illinois, filed herein on the 24th day of June, 1884, for leave to intervene herein as holders of certain second-mortgage bonds of said Chicago, Danville & Vincennes Railroad Company, be dismissed at the cost of said petitioner, it appearing to the court that the trustees under said second mortgage are parties to this suit and have appeared and answered herein, and that there is no proof showing that said trustees are not acting in good faith."

On the 11th of October, 1884, The National City Bank of Ottawa prayed the circuit court for leave to prosecute an appeal in its own name to this court from the decree of June 30, 1884, the grounds of its prayer being the facts set forth in its intervening petition of June 24, 1884, and also the fact that such decree was entered by consent of all the parties to the record, including Elwell, notwithstanding the effect of the decree was to leave the bank wholly without remedy on its bonds, while other holders of like bonds were provided for by a secret agreement, with the knowledge and consent of Elwell, and against the protest of the bank, and that Elwell had refused to appeal from such decree.

On the 8d of August, 1885, the court made an order authorizing the bank to appeal from the decree of June 30, 1884, in the name of James W. Elwell, trustee, on executing to him an indemnity against all costs and expenses which might be incurred. The appeal thus allowed was not perfected, but on the 28th of June, 1886, the court entered an order which recited the fact that the bank had requested Elwell, as trustee, to perfect an appeal to this court from the decree of June 30, 1884, and that he had refused to comply with such request; and ordering that the bank have leave to appeal from that decree to this court, in the name of Elwell, as trustee, on condition that it should give a bond to indemnify Elwell, and on the further condition that the bank, or someone in its behalf, should give the usual appeal bond, in the sum of $1,000, both of said bonds to be filed on or before June 30, 1886. Those bonds were duly filed, and the transcript of the record was filed in this court on October 18, 1886, and an addition thereto, by stipulation between the parties, on January 14, 1890. The appeal bond runs to Fosdick and Fish, trustees, "for the use and benefit of themselves and for the use and benefit of each and all parties affected or to be affected by the appeal in the condition hereunder written to this obligation." The bond recites that the appeal is from the decree of June 30, 1884, made on the original and supplemental bills of Fosdick and Fish, the cross-bill of Elwell, the cross-bill of

The Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company and another cross-bill.

The Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company now moves to dismiss the appeal of Elwell, trustee, by The National City Bank of Ottawa, on the ground, among others, that Elwell, trustee, on the 16th of October, 1884, before the appeal was allowed, executed and delivered to The Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company a written release of all errors had or committed in and concerning such decree, and especially releasing and waiving his right as such trustee to appeal from the decree; which release, on the 15th of November, 1884, was filed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court. A duly certified copy of such release is presented to this court as part of the moving papers. Its execution and authenticity are not denied on the part of the bank. It is entitled in the bill filed by Fosdick and Fish, and in the cross-bill brought by The Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Company. It contains this statement:

"Comes now James W. Elwell, trustee, etc., one of the defendants in the above-entitled cause and cross-cause, and says that of the one million convertible mortgage bonds referred to in said original bill, secured by trust deed, of which he is sole trustee, as therein charged, forty-five of said bonds, of one thousand dollars each, have not been issued by the company, and are now deposited with the clerk of said court. Fifty-eight of said bonds, representing fifty-eight thousand dollars, were issued in exchange for coupons, under the funding contract or scheme referred to in said original bill and decree. That all of said coupons have been paid out of the proceeds of sale of said railroad and property, as provided by said decree. And that the holders of six hundred and seventeen of the balance of said bonds, amounting to six hundred and seventeen thousand dollars, do not desire further litigation in said cause and cross-cause; and that the holders of the balance of said bonds have hitherto declined to contribute to the cost of this litigation, or to protect him, as such trustee, against loss or the payment of costs or counsel fees. Now, therefore, the said James W. Elwell, trustee, as in said trust deed provided, representing the bondholders in said deed mentioned, for himself as such trustee, releases all errors whatsoever had or committed in or concerning the decree entered in the aforesaid cause and cross-cause by said court on the thirtieth (30th) day of June, A. D. 1884, and in and about the proceedings in said cause leading to said decree, and especially releases all his right, as such trustee, of appeal from said decree and proceedings, without intending, however, to prejudice the right of the holders of any of said convertible mortgage bonds to enforce the payment of their said bonds, or any part thereof."

It is contended for the bank that Elwell had no authority, as trustee in the second mortgage, to release errors in the foreclosure proceedings or in the decree and to waive the right to appeal from the decree; that his attempt to do so was a breach of trust, and outside of the powers and duties conferred upon him by the trust deed; and that the release does not bar the right of the bank, as the holder of bonds secured by the trust deed to Elwell and Fish, to prosecute this appeal by the leave of the court, in the name of Elwell, nor furnish any reason for dismissing it. In the petition of intervention filed by the bank on the 24th of June, 1884, six days before the final decree was entered, it was alleged "that neither before the rendition of the final decree in this cause in this court, nor after its reversal by the supreme court, has the said Elwell shown any diligence or attempted to make any arrangement to prevent a sacrifice of the interests of your petitioner and others similarly situated;" and "that, unless it shall be permitted to become a party to this suit and file its answer therein, it will lose its rights in the premises under some collusive compromise or colorable sale, or through the indifference or neglect of the said Elwell." The court denied the prayer of the intervening petition of the bank, stating "that the trustees under said second mortgage are parties to this suit and have appeared and answered herein, and that there is no proof showing that said trustees are not acting in good faith."

It thus appears that the court passed upon the question of collusion on the part of Elwell, and held that the bank was bound by the acts of Elwell, representing it as trustee. No action was taken by the bank to appeal for more than three months. By an order made August 3, 1885, it was allowed to appeal in the name of Elwell, trustee, but it failed to perfect any appeal under such allowance. Such appeal was re-allowed on the 28th of June, 1886, and was perfected on the 30th of June, 1886, being exactly two years after the entry of the final decree and the last day on which the appeal could be taken. Meantime, by an instrument executed in October, 1884, and filed in the circuit court in November, 1884, at a time when no appeal was pending from the decree, the release of errors was executed by Elwell, trustee.

We are of opinion that this release bound all bondholders represented by Elwell. It appears by the release that only 955 of the convertible bonds were issued; that 58 were issued in exchange for coupons, all of which coupons had been paid out of the proceeds of the sale of the property; that, of the remaining 897, the holders of 617 did not desire further litigation; and that the holders of the remaining 280 had hitherto declined to contribute to the cost of the litigation or to protect the trustee against loss or the payment of costs or counsel fees. No substantial reasons appear for permitting the bank, as the holder of only $14,000 of the bonds, to defeat the plainly expressed will of the holders of the remainder. Sage v. Central R. Co. 99 U. S. 384 [25: 394].

The allegation of neglect or collusion on the part of Elwell, as trustee, was found by the circuit court to be untrue. The trustee represented the bondholders not only in the proceedings which resulted in the entry of the decree, so that the bondholders were not necessary parties, but he also bound them by his release of errors. His relations to them had not changed between the time of the entry of the decree and the time of the execution of the release. Shaw v. Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co.

100 U. S. 605, 611, 612 [25: 757, 758, 759]; First Nat. Bank v. Shedd, 121 U. S. 74, 86 [30: 882]; Barnes v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 122 U. S. 1 [31: 1128].

The release of errors, although not found in the transcript of the record, is properly brought before this court, for the purpose for which it is presented. In Dakota Co. v. Glidden, 118 U. S. 222, 225 [28: 981, 982], this court, speaking by Mr. Justice Miller, said: "But this court is compelled, as all courts are, to receive evidence dehors the record affecting their proceedings in a case before them on error or appeal. The death of one of the parties after a writ of error or appeal requires a new proceeding to supply its place. The transfer of the interest of one of the parties by assignment or by a judicial proceeding in another court, as in bankruptcy or otherwise, is brought to the attention of the court by evidence outside of the original record, and acted on. A release of errors may be filed as a bar to the writ. A settlement of the controversy, with an agreement to dismiss the appeal or writ of error, or any stipulation as to proceedings in this court, signed by the parties, will be enforced."

By the provisions of the mortgage to Elwell, he, as trustee, could proceed to collect the mortgage debt, by litigation or otherwise, only at the request of the holders of a majority of the bonds. As appears from the terms of the release, and is not controverted, the majority of such holders desired the litigation to cease. The trustee was authorized to put an end to it, and his waiver of an appeal binds all who act in his name as trustee. The bank was not a party to the suit, and its right to appeal depended entirely upon the action of the trustee. Ex parte Cutting, 94 U. S. 14, 21 [24: 49, 51]; Ex parte Cockcroft, 104 U. S. 578 [26: 856]. All that the circuit court did was to allow the bank to appeal in the name of the trustee. The bank is bound by all the preceding acts of the trustee, done in good faith. On the facts of the case, the appeal must be considered as the appeal of the trustee, and as barred by his release executed long before the appeal was granted.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, having been of counsel in this case, did not sit in it or take any part in its decision.

Argued March 20, 1890. Decided March 31, 1890.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of New Hampshire dismissing a suit by a stockholder against a National Bank, its directors and its cashier to recover moneys lost by their illegal conduct. Reversed, with direction to the Circuit Court to dismiss for want of jurisdiction.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frederick P. Fish and Thos. L. Livermore, for appellees, in favor of motion:

The objection of want of jurisdiction may be raised at any stage of the case, and it is not necessary to plead it, except to contradict the record.

Sullivan v. Fulton Steamboat Co. 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 450 (5: 302); Peale v. Phipps, 55 U. S. 14 How. 869 (14: 459); Mississippi & R. R. Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403 (25: 206); Grace v. Am. Cent. Ins. Co. 109 U. S. 278 (27: 932); Hartog v. Memory, 116 U. S. 588 (29: 725).

Jurisdiction must appear affirmatively on the record.

Turner v. Bank of N. A. 4 U. S. 4 Dall. 8 (1: 718); Ex parte Smith, 94 U. S. 455 (24: 165); Robertson v. Cease, 97 U. S. 648 (24: 1057); Grace v. Am. Cent. Ins. Co. 109 U. S. 278 (27: 932); Bore v. Preston, 111 U. S. 252 (28: 419).

The Act of July 12, 1882, chap. 290, sec. 4, repealed clause 10 of section 629 of the Revised Statutes, which gave the circuit court jurisdiction of suits by or against national banks, and the mere fact that a national bank is a party no longer gives jurisdiction.

Leather Mfrs. Bank v. Cooper, 120 U. S. 778 (80: 816); Jefferson Nat. Bank v. Fore, 25 Fed. Rep. 209; Union Nat. Bank v. Miller, 15 Fed. Rep. 703.

Revised Statutes, sec. 5239, has no reference to misapplication of funds by the directors of a national bank.

Brinckerhoff v. Bostwick, 88 N. Y. 52; Conway v. Halsey, 44 N. J. L. 462; Trenholm v. Com. Nat. Bank, 88 Fed. Rep. 328.

The willful misapplication referred to in section 5209 must be for the benefit of the directors, and not for the benefit of the bank, as charged in this case.

U. S. v. Britton, 107 U. S. 655 (27: 520); U. S. v. Harper, 38 Fed. Rep. 471.

Mr. H. G. Wood for appellant, in opposition.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

David C. Whittemore, of Manchester, in the District of New Hampshire, in his own behalf and in behalf of such stockholders of the Amoskeag National Bank, a corporation duly established under the laws of the United States and having its principal place of business at said Manchester, as might join therein, brought his bill of complaint, May 9, 1885, against the Amoskeag National Bank, Moody Currier, George B. Chandler, David B. Varney, John B. Varick, Henry Chandler, John S. Kidder, Edson Hill and Reed P. Silver, all of Manchester, in said district, six of them directors, one of them the cashier and the other a former director of said Bank, alleging in substance that complainant was the owner of five shares of the capital stock of the Bank; that in 1875, a firm styled Dunn, Harris & Co. was adjudicated bankrupt by the United States District Court for said District of New Hampshire and an assignee appointed, being indebted at the time to the Bank in the sum of one thousand dollars, and one of the members of the firm, Cyrus Dunn, being indebted to the Bank in the sum of five thousand dollars; that the firm offered a composition of fifteen per cent to their creditors, and Cyrus Dunn offered a composition of twenty per cent to his creditors; that the Bank, by a vote of its directors, constituted one of their number its agent in the bankruptcy proceedings, and he entered into an agreement with Cyrus Dunn that, in consideration that the Bank should furnish him with money sufficient to carry out the compromise, he would pay the agent of the Bank a sum equal to the sum due to the Bank; that in pursuance of this agreement, the Bank advanced from its funds a large sum without security, in doing which the directors and officers violated their duties and obligations to the Bank's stockholders, and their acts were in violation of the charter of the Bank and the laws of the United States; that the sum advanced was used in purchasing claims against Cyrus Dunn; that the compromise was confirmed, and the property of Cyrus Dunn conveyed by the assignee to the agent of the Bank, and by him to the Bank; that afterwards the composition was set aside and the assignee brought suit against the Bank to recover the property, which was decided by the district court in favor of the assignee; that in 1876, a note was given to the Bank signed by two of its directors and Cyrus Dunn of the insolvent firm, for the money advanced by said Bank in excess of what was received from the assignee, and this note was included as part of the assets of the Bank; and that the Bank has made no attempt to collect the note, and has expended large sums of money in defense of its illegal acts; and complainant prays that the respondents, the directors of the Bank, may be decreed to pay to the Bank whatever it may have lost by reason of this illegal conduct; and that a receiver may be appointed to collect said note, and for such other relief as may be just, etc. The bill was demurred to by the respondents, and the demurrer sustained upon the ground that the plaintiff could not maintain his bill because of his failure to bring himself within Equity Rule 94; and thereupon a decree was entered dismissing the bill with costs, and an appeal was prayed to this court.

All the parties were citizens of the District of New Hampshire, and the Bank was located therein; and in our judgment the circuit court for that district had no jurisdiction. A motion to dismiss the appeal on this ground has heretofore been made, but was overruled, as this court undoubtedly has appellate jurisdiction to determine whether the circuit court had original jurisdiction.

Prior to July 12, 1892, suits might be brought by or against national banks in the circuit courts of the United States in the district where the banks were located, but by the Act of that date it was provided that "the jurisdiction for suits hereafter brought by or against any association established under any law providing for national banking associations, except suits between them and the United States, or its officers and agents, shall be the same as, and not other than, the jurisdiction for suits by or against banks not organized under any law of the United States, which do or might do banking business where such national banking associations may be doing business when such suits may be begun." 22 Stat. 162, 163, chap. 290, sec. 4.

But counsel for complainant claims that the circuit court had jurisdiction under §§ 5209 and 5289 of the Revised Statutes. Section 5209 prescribes punishment for the embezzlement, abstraction or willful misapplication of any of the moneys, funds or credits of a national banking association, by any president, director, cashier, teller, clerk or agent thereof, and for other acts done without authority of the directors, with intent to defraud the bank; and section 5289 provides for a suit by the controller of the currency to forfeit the franchises of national banks for the intentional violation by their directors, or the intentional permission by them of such violation by any of the officers, agents or servants of the association, of any of the provisions of the title of the Revised Statutes relating to national banks. This bill obviously cannot be retained by reason of anything contained in those sections.

As the Circuit Court had no jurisdiction, but dismissed the bill upon another ground, we reverse its decree, with a direction to dismiss the bill for want of jurisdiction.

Errors in findings of fact—in finding of law—court, when sole judge of facts—refusal to find incidental facts—ratification of agent's acts.

1. Errors in the findings of fact by the court are not subject to revision by this court, if there was any evidence upon which such findings could be made.
2. Assignments of error in findings of fact amount, in substance, to the same thing as the alleged error in finding as a matter of law that the findings of fact stated could lawfully be made from the evidence admitted and considered.
3. Where the case is tried by the court, without a jury, it is, like a jury, the sole judge of the credibility of the witnesses, and the questions of fact, on the evidence, where there is any evidence to justify the findings.
4. The refusal of the court to find immaterial or incidental facts, amounting only to evidence bearing on the ultimate facts found, is not a proper subject of review.
5. Where the action is brought for the alleged wrongful acts of the defendant in selling certain bonds of plaintiff and using the proceeds to pay the notes of one Hubbard, if Hubbard, by arrangement between him and plaintiff, had authority to and did consent to such acts, and the plaintiff, having full knowledge of the transactions, ratified and confirmed what was done, he cannot maintain the action.

Messrs. George F. Hoar and Wm. Gaston for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action at law, brought in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts, by a writ, dated September 22, 1881, by James S. P. Hathaway against The First National Bank of Cambridge, a national banking corporation.

The declaration contains three counts in tort, the substance of which is that the defendant had converted to its own use certain bonds of the United States, with the interest coupons thereon, the property of the plaintiff; and that it had converted to its own use the proceeds of the unlawful and unauthorized sale by it of such bonds, with the coupons thereon, the property of the plaintiff; and that it had unlawfully sold such bonds, with the interest coupons thereon, the property of the plaintiff, and converted the proceeds to its own use. The bonds were seven bonds of $1,000 each, commonly called 5-20 bonds, with interest coupons attached; five of the same bonds, of $500 each, with coupons; and five of the same bonds, of $100 each, with coupons.

The declaration also contains two counts in contract, one for money received by the defendant for the sale of the bonds, and for interest on the money so received, from the time of the sale. The second count in contract alleges that Gilbert Hathaway, the father of the plaintiff, in 1865, placed with the defendant and in the hands of its cashier certain bonds, his property, which were to stand as collateral security for the payment of certain notes which might become due to the defendant from one Appleton Hubbard; that those bonds were afterwards converted by the defendant into such 5-20 bonds, and thenceforth, by agreement of the parties, the 5-20 bonds were to be held by the defendant as collateral security for the payment of any notes which might thereafter become due to the defendant from Hubbard; that certain notes were afterwards made by Hubbard to the defendant, for which the bonds were to stand as collateral security, but only on the express agreement by the defendant that it had no right to sell or dispose of any of the bonds, except upon and after the maturity and nonpayment by Hubbard of such notes, and then only to such an amount as would be sufficient to pay any overdue and unpaid note; that the defendant knew that the bonds were the property of Gilbert Hathaway, and not the property of Hubbard; that Hathaway died in 1871, and the plaintiff, as residuary legatee under his will, which had been duly proved, became the owner of the bonds and coupons; that the defendant agreed with Gilbert Hathaway, and after his death agreed with the plaintiff, to keep the bonds safely and return them to the plaintiff on his demand therefor, subject only to the right to sell sufficient of them to pay any overdue and unpaid note of Hubbard, for which the bonds were so held as collateral security; that the defendant sold all of the bonds at a time when no note of Hubbard was due and unpaid to it, and when it had no right to sell the same; and that the defendant owes the plaintiff $20,000, for the proceeds of the sale of such bonds, and for the interest coupons attached thereto, and for interest on such proceeds from May 1, 1879, when the same was demanded by the plaintiff from the defendant, and which the defendant then refused to pay to the plaintiff.

The answer of the defendant denies all the allegations of the writ and the declaration, and sets up that whatever bonds were sold by it were rightfully sold; that it had the legal right to retain whatever money it had retained from the proceeds of the sale of any of the bonds; and that whatever of the acts complained of were done by the defendant were done by the consent of the plaintiff, so far as his consent was necessary and proper to the validity of such acts, and were ratified by the plaintiff, so far as he had any interest therein.

There was a trial in 1883 by a jury, which failed to agree on a verdict. In September, 1885, by a written stipulation, a trial by a jury was waived, and the case was tried by the court without a jury. On the 16th of January, 1886, the court found as facts:

(1) That, prior to April 24, 1879, the plaintiff's testator delivered to Appleton Hubbard, of Cambridge, certain bonds of the United States amounting, at their face value, to $10,000, with power and authority to dispose of them and to deal with them in the manner in which the same were disposed of and dealt with by said Hubbard, as hereinafter stated;

(2) That, after such delivery, Hubbard pledged them to the defendant as collateral security for the payment of twenty-five promissory notes made by said Hubbard and payable to and owned by the defendant, which notes were in the whole for the sum of $10,000, and were to mature on different days from the 24th of April, 1879, to the 5th of August, 1879;

(3) That, on the 24th of April, 1879, Hubbard agreed with the defendant that said bonds should be sold and the proceeds invested in other bonds of the United States;

(4) That, on the 25th of April, 1879, the defendant sold said bonds and received for them the sum of $10,156.25;

(5) That, on the 29th or 30th of April, 1889, Hubbard agreed with the defendant that the proceeds of the sale of said bonds should not be invested in other bonds of the United States, but that such proceeds should be applied by the defendant to the payment of the notes of Hubbard then held by the defendant, part of which were due and part of which were to become due, and that proper allowances of interest by way of charge or rebate should be made in respect of said notes;

(6) That thereupon the defendant applied said proceeds according to said agreement, and that the surplus of said proceeds over and above the amount of all said notes, with allowance of interest as aforesaid, was $175.85;

(7) That, on the 16th of May, 1879, the defendant paid said sum of $175.85 to Hubbard, and on the 19th of May, 1879, Hubbard paid the same amount to the plaintiff;

(8) That the plaintiff afterwards had knowledge of all the facts hereinbefore stated, and, having knowledge of the same, ratified and confirmed the said contracts, dealings and transactions between Hubbard and the defendant.

On these findings of fact the court held as matter of law: (1) That the evidence offered by the defendant to prove proceedings in insolvency against Appleton Hubbard is irrelevant and inadmissible; (2) That the above findings of fact may lawfully be made from the evidence admitted and considered; (3) That, on the above findings of fact, there should be judgment for the defendant, for costs.

On the same day, a judgment was entered that the plaintiff take nothing by his writ, and that the defendant recover the costs of suit from the plaintiff.

There is a bill of exceptions, which states that each party introduced evidence to maintain on his part the issue joined; that the evidence on both sides is annexed to the bill of exceptions and made part thereof; that, after the close of the evidence, the plaintiff insisted that he was entitled to judgment, and filed with the court certain prayers for findings of fact and of law, which are annexed to and made part of the bill of exceptions; that the court refused to make any of such findings, except in so far as they were consistent with the findings of fact and of law which the court afterwards made, being the findings above set forth, to which refusal the plaintiff excepted; and that the plaintiff also filed exceptions to the findings of fact and of law so made, and to the refusal of the court to make the findings of fact and of law so requested by the plaintiff.

The plaintiff brought a writ of error to review the judgment; and, he having died, the writ is prosecuted in the name of his executrix.

The assignments of error filed in the circuit court and sent up with the record allege that the court erred, first, in making the finding of fact numbered (1); second, in making the finding of fact numbered (5); third, in making the findings of fact numbered respectively (7) and (8); fourth and fifth, in making its findings of law numbered (2) and (3), and sixth, in making its mixed finding of law and fact, that there was ratification and confirmation of the dealings of Hubbard and the defendant concerning the $10,000, face value, of the United States government bonds in controversy.

The first three assignments of error allege errors merely in the findings of fact by the court. Those errors are not subject to revision by this court, if there was any evidence upon which such findings could be made. The Francis Wright, 105 U. S. 381, 387 [26: 1100, 1102]; McClure v. United States, 116 U. S. 145, 152 [29: 572, 574]; Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 116 U. S. 154, 157 [29: 584, 586]; Merchants Ins. Co. v. Allen, 120 U. S. 67, 71 [30: 858, 860]. Those three assignments of error amount, in substance, to the same thing as the alleged error in finding as a matter of law that the findings of fact stated could lawfully be made from the evidence admitted and considered.

The assignment of error numbered 6 raises the same question which is raised by that numbered 4, namely, whether there was any evidence in the case which authorized the court to make the finding of fact numbered (8), covered by the assignment of error numbered 3, as to ratification and confirmation.

As to the findings of fact numbered (1) and (2) we are of opinion that, on the evidence of Hubbard, and that of the defendant's cashier, Bullard and that of the plaintiff, and the other evidence in the case, the court was justified in making those findings. It was, like a jury, the sole judge of the credibility of the witnesses, and the questions were questions of fact, on the evidence. It would serve no good purpose to examine the evidence critically, nor is it our province to do so. It is sufficient to say that the case was not one where there was no evidence to justify the findings of the court.

The same remarks may be made as to the other findings of fact made by the court, and especially as to its finding that the plaintiff, with knowledge of all the facts found by the court, ratified and confirmed the contracts, dealings and transactions between Hubbard and the defendant, set forth by the court.

As to the refusal of the court to find certain facts specified by the plaintiff, and certain propositions of law based on those facts, they were either immaterial facts or incidental facts amounting only to evidence bearing on the ultimate facts found. The Francis Wright, 105 U. S. 381, 389 [26: 1100, 1102]; McClure v. United States, 116 U. S. 145, 152 [29: 572, 574]; Union Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 116 U. S. 154, 157 [29: 584, 586]; Merchants Ins. Co. v. Allen, 121 U. S. 67, 71 [30: 858, 860].

The action being founded on the alleged wrongful acts of the defendant in selling the bonds and using the proceeds to pay the notes of Hubbard, it follows that, if Hubbard consented to such acts, and if, by the arrangement between Hubbard and Gilbert Hathaway, the former had authority to consent to such acts, and if the plaintiff, having full knowledge of the transactions, ratified and confirmed what was done, he could not maintain this action.

Judgment affirmed.

Filing of record—effect of omission to file.

1. Where the record is not filed at the term succeeding the allowance of the appeal, the appeal ceases to have any operation or effect.
2. As in this case there was no allowance of a second appeal, and when the record was filed the time had expired on the first appeal, for filing it, such filing was not done in pursuance of an appeal still in force; nor could an appeal then have been allowed, as two years had expired from the date of the final decree.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota dismissing a suit with costs. Dismissed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John G. Woolley for appellant.
Messrs. W. P. Clough, A. H. Garland and H. J. May for appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal must be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. Small filed his bill in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of Minnesota, whence the cause was subsequently removed into the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota, and, upon hearing, resulted on the 24th day of June, 1884, in a decree dismissing the complainant's bill, and rendering judgment in favor of the defendant for its costs to be taxed. On the 25th day of June, 1884, the complainant prayed an appeal to this court which was granted. On the 21st day of May, 1886, complainant filed an appeal bond and a citation was issued, returnable at the October Term, 1886, dated April 30, 1886. The record herein was filed October 19, 1886. The only appeal which from the record before us appears to have been prayed and allowed was that of the 25th day of June, 1884.

But, as we have said many times before, inasmuch as the record was not filed at the term succeeding the allowance of the appeal, that appeal ceased to have any operation or effect, and the case stood as if it had never been allowed. There was no allowance of an appeal after that, and when the record was filed on the 19th day of October, 1886, this was not done in pursuance of an appeal still in force, nor could an appeal then have been allowed, as two years had expired from the date of the final decree. This appeal was not "taken" as provided, and we are therefore compelled to dismiss it. Credit Co. v. Arkansas Cent. R. Co. 128 U. S. 258 [32: 448]; Richardson v. Green, 180 U. Fees of U. S. commissioner—approval of account by court.

1. A commissioner of the United States circuit court is entitled to the fee of $5 a day for hearing and deciding motions upon bail and the sufficiency thereof, and for the continuance of cases before him.
2. The approval of a commissioner's account by a circuit court of the United States, under the Act of February 22, 1875 (18 Stat. 383), is prima facie evidence of the correctness of the items of that account, and, in the absence of clear and unequivocal proof of mistake on the part of the court, is conclusive.

A PPEAL from a judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of claimant for services rendered by him as a Commissioner of the Circuit Court of the United States. Affirmed.

134 U. S.

Statement by Mr. Justice Lamar:

This is an appeal from a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims against the United States in favor of Richard M. Jones, for services rendered by him as a commissioner of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of North Carolina.

The material facts of the case, as found by the court upon the evidence, are, that the claimant had been a commissioner of the said court from 1883 to the bringing of the action; that from December 8, 1885, to June 30, 1886, as such commissioner, he issued warrants in six cases, in which issue was joined and testimony taken, in three cases in which issue was joined and no testimony was taken, and in three cases in which issue was not joined, the defendants discharged and no testimony taken; and that he duly made his docket entries in each and all of those cases by order and authority of the court, and in the manner required by its rules.

His accounts for fees and for keeping his dockets were verified by oath, and presented to the court in the presence of the district attorney, and approved by the court in due form. For those accounts, thus approved, he was allowed a fee of three dollars in each case where issue was joined and testimony taken, two dollars where issue was joined but no testimony taken, and one dollar where issue was not joined, and the defendant discharged. His account also showed charges on eleven different days from March 12, 1884, to September 15, 1887, in as many criminal cases, each of which charges was either "for hearing and deciding on criminal charges, in deciding on amount of bail and sufficiency thereof," or "for hearing and deciding on criminal charges, in hearing and deciding on motion for continuance." These charges were approved by the circuit court, but not paid.

The court found as a conclusion of law that the claimant was entitled to $55 for these last eleven cases, and entered a judgment in his favor for $76. From that judgment the United States brings this appeal.

The only assignment of error presented by the government in this appeal is, that the court erred in finding that claimant is entitled to $55 for hearing and deciding on amount of bail and sufficiency thereof in four cases, and for hearing and deciding on motion for continuance in seven cases.

Messrs. John B. Cotton, Assistant Atty-Gen., and F. P. Devoees for appellant.

Mr. George A. King for appellee.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

A brief reference to the powers and duties of a commissioner, as an examining and committing magistrate, will be sufficient to dispose of the only question presented by this appeal. Section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides that, "for any crime or offense against the United States, the offender may, by . . . any commissioner of the circuit court to take bail, . . . be arrested and imprisoned, or bailed, as the case may be, for trial before such court of the United States as by law has cognizance of the offense. Copies of the process shall be returned as speedily as may be into the clerk's office of such court, together with the recognizances of the witnesses for their appearance to testify in the case," etc., etc.

By section 1015 it is further provided that "bail may be admitted" by such commissioner "upon all arrests in criminal cases where the offense is not punishable by death."

By section 1982 such commissioners are vested with the power to institute proceedings against persons violating any of the provisions of chapter seven of the title Crimes.

Section 1983 provides for the increase of the number of commissioners "so as to afford a speedy and convenient means for the arrest and examination of persons charged with the crimes referred to in the preceding section."

By section 1984 these officers are vested with other important powers; and by section 1985 every marshal and deputy marshal is required to obey and execute all warrants or other process that the commissioners may issue in the lawful performance of their duties.

By other sections numerous duties of a purely clerical and ministerial character are attached to this office. The compensation of a commissioner is clearly prescribed and classified by section 847 of the Revised Statutes according to the character of the services performed. For acts purely clerical and ministerial, such as administering oaths, taking acknowledgments, taking and certifying depositions to file or furnishing a copy of the same, specific fees are provided, and for issuing writs or warrants or other services he has the same compensation as is allowed to clerks for like services. For acts not merely clerical, but which are performed by the commissioner in his judicial capacity, his fees are regulated on a basis of per diem compensation. Among the provisions of this kind is the one upon which this controversy has arisen, viz.: "For hearing and deciding on criminal charges, five dollars a day for the time necessarily employed."

It is admitted that from March 12, 1884, to June 20, 1888, the period covered by the claim in dispute, there came before the appellee, in his capacity as commissioner, on eleven different days, eleven separate cases to be heard and decided against various persons, each charged with a crime against the laws of the United States; that in four of these cases he heard and decided motions upon bail, and the sufficiency thereof; and in the other seven motions for continuance were heard and decided by him.

There can be but one answer, in our opinion, to the question whether the commissioner should be allowed a fee of five dollars a day for his services on those eleven days. The decision, upon a motion for bail and the sufficiency thereof, is a judicial determination of the very matter which the Statutes authorize and require him "to hear and decide," to wit, whether a party arrested for a crime against the United States, when brought before him for examination, shall be discharged, or committed on bail for trial, and in default thereof imprisoned. With respect to motions for continuance, the granting or refusal of them is unquestionably a necessary incident to, and a part of, the hearing and determining of criminal charges; and the exercise of that power in such criminal proceedings is indispensable to the right of the accused to have a fair and full investigation of the offense charged against him and to a sufficient time for the summoning of his witnesses as well as for employing and consulting with counsel to aid him in his defense.

It is contended by the assistant attorney-general that the per diem fee in such case is not only intended for the service specified, but that the "time actually employed is also an element to be considered." A sufficient answer to this objection is furnished in the findings of the court below that the account of the commissioner for the fees charged for the services in question was verified by oath and presented to the United States court of which he was the commissioner, in open court, in the presence of the district attorney, approved by the court, and an order, approving the same as being in accordance with law and just, was entered upon the records of the court. The approval of a commissioner's account by a circuit court of the United States, under the Act of February 22, 1875 (18 Stat. 383), is prima facie evidence of the correctness of the items of that account; and in the absence of clear and unequivocal proof of mistake on the part of the court it should be conclusive.

We think the authorities cited by the attorney for the appellee in support of the claim in question are directly in point.

The judgment of the Court of Claims is affirmed.

Jurisdiction as to amount—distinct decrees against several parties cannot be joined to give jurisdiction.

1. Where a foreclosure has been had on different tracts of land claimed by different owners, and it was decreed that each owner, a defendant, could redeem the land by paying the amount his tract sold for within a year or be foreclosed, and no tract sold for as much as five thousand dollars, several defendants cannot join in an appeal to this court and consolidate the several amounts awarded against them, and thereby give this court jurisdiction.
2. Distinct decrees against distinct parties on distinct causes of action, or on a single cause of action in which there are distinct liabilities, cannot be joined to give this court jurisdiction on appeal.

Argued Dec. 6, 9, 1889. Decided April 7, 1890.

A PPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois decreeing that the owners of the equity of redemption or residuary interest in several tracts of land may each redeem the tract owned by him from a sale under a decree of foreclosure. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Lucien Birdseye and Edwin

Messrs. H. Tompkins, Jas. McCartney and T. J. Golden, for appellants, in opposition to motion:

An appeal lies in this case as the jurisdiction of the court below is a proper one for review and it had no jurisdiction. The limited jurisdiction of the circuit court is always a subject of inquiry in this court when the record shows the want of it.

Scott v. Sandford, 60 U. S. 19 How. 393 (15:691).

Jurisdictional fact may be looked into from the whole record.

Orignon v. Astor, 43 U. S. 2 How. 319 (11:283).

Parties cannot join to give jurisdiction.

Oliver v. Alexander, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 143 (8:349); Spear v. Place, 52 U. S. 11 How. 522 (18:796).

Each complainant must be able to sue each defendant.

Rich v. Lambert, 53 U. S. 12 How. 347 (18:1017); Strawbridge v. Curtiss, 7 U. S. 3 Cranch, 267 (2:435); New Orleans v. Winter, 14 U. S. 1 Wheat. 91 (4:44); Ballard Paving Co. v. Mulford, 100 U. S. 147 (25:591).

As record shows circuit court had no jurisdiction, the supreme court will dismiss the suit.

Bingham v. Cabbot, 3 U. S. 8 Dall. 19 (1:491); McCormick v. Sullivan, 23 U. S. 10 Wheat. 191 (6:300).

Appearance cannot enlarge the power of the court nor prevent motion to dismiss the suit for want of jurisdiction.

U. S. v. Yates, 47 U. S. 6 How. 605 (12:575); Capron v. Van Noorden, 6 U. S. 2 Cranch, 126 (2:220).

An appellate court before whom a cause is brought of which the court below had no jurisdiction may take jurisdiction so far as to annul and reverse the proceedings below.

U. S. v. Nourse, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 470, 495 (8:487, 477).

An appeal lies in this case, as appellees' action is to enjoin the Illinois Supreme Court from further proceedings until appellees can foreclose. If the action is to foreclose, then it is in solido for the whole debt.

The matter in dispute is the debt claimed, not the damages or prayer for judgment.

Rich v. Lambert, 53 U. S. 12 How. 352 (18:1018); Lee v. Watson, 66 U. S. 1 Wall. 337 (17:557); Wilson v. Daniel, 3 U. S. 8 Dall. 401, 408 (1:655, 657).

Purchasers of the equity of redemption, to redeem, must pay the whole debt. There can be no severance until the debt is paid, or foreclosed, under a legal proceeding.

Jones, Mortg. §§ 1068, 1070, 1075; Powell, Mortg. 342; Bradley v. Snyder, 14 Ill. 263; Meacham v. Steele, 98 Ill. 141.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a motion to dismiss an appeal upon the ground that the interests of each of the appellants in the case are separate and distinct, and do not involve an amount sufficient to give this court jurisdiction.

The case grows out of Kenicott v. Wayne County, 38 U. S. 16 Wall. 452 [21:319], and Wayne County v. Kennicott, 94 U. S. 498 [24:260]; and those cases are referred to for a more minute statement of all the early facts of the controversy than is necessary to be made for the purpose of considering the question now before us. A brief summary of some of the leading facts of the controversy will be sufficient for present purposes.

On the 20th of April, 1859, the County of Wayne in the State of Illinois, by virtue of an authority derived from an Act of the State Legislature, executed a mortgage and a deed of trust upon about 100,000 acres of its swamp and overflowed lands, to Isaac Seymour of New York City, as trustee, to secure the payment of $300,000 of its bonds, which had been issued for the purpose of raising funds with which to construct a railroad. On the same day the Mount Vernon Railroad Company, the corporation that had been organized to build the road for the benefit of which the aforesaid aid had been granted, as a part of the same general transaction of raising funds with which to build its road, executed a mortgage to Seymour, upon its contemplated railroad, its appurtenances, franchises and other property and effects, both present and prospective, as an additional security for the aforesaid bonds. The bonds were sold and came into the hands of bona fide purchasers for value, and default having been made in the payment of the interest on them, as it came due, a bill for foreclosure of the mortgages and deed of trust was filed, on the 7th of March, 1865, by John W. Kennicott and other claimants of a number of the bonds which had been sold, against the County of Wayne and the Mount Vernon Railroad Company. The railroad company defaulted, and, upon a hearing in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Illinois, the bill was dismissed as to the County of Wayne, on the ground that the mortgage was invalid because the proofs failed to show that at the date it was made there was any line of railroad constructed or authorized to be constructed through that county, with which the Mount Vernon railroad was connected in any manner. Upon appeal, this court reversed that decree, and held that the mortgage in controversy was valid, as to bona fide holders of the bonds it was intended to secure, and that the complainants were entitled to a decree in their favor. Kenicott v. Wayne County, supra. A final decree in the case was rendered by the circuit court in June, 1874, which was affirmed by this court on appeal. Wayne County v. Kenicott, supra. In pursuance of that decree the lands covered by the mortgage were sold at a master's sale on the 18th of September, 1877, for an amount insufficient to satisfy the claims of the bondholders, and, the time for redemption having expired, the master, on May 27, 1879, executed and delivered a deed for them to one Broadwell, who had come into possession of the certificates of purchase at the aforesaid sale. The appellees in this case, who were complainants below, claim under Broadwell.

Between the date of the execution of the deed of trust and the mortgage before mentioned, and March 7, 1865, when the foreclosure suit was commenced, the County of Wayne had sold a large amount of the lands embraced in those incumbrances to individuals who were not made parties to the foreclosure proceedings. The appellants here claim under those purchases from the county.

The case, as it now stands, is a consolidation of four others and an intervening petition filed by leave of the court. The first of those consolidated cases was a suit in equity brought on the 25th of January, 1882, by the appellee, J. C. Cloyd, a citizen of New York, against Clarissa Jordan and some twenty-four or more other defendants, all but two of whom were citizens of Illinois, one of those two being a citizen of Ohio, and the other a citizen of Colorado. The bill set out, somewhat in detail, the various steps in the proceedings above referred to, and further alleged that, by reason thereof and also by reason of the conveyances before mentioned, the County of Wayne had no right, title or interest in and to the lands in dispute and was not in any other manner interested in the present suit.

The prayer of the bill was that a subpoena issue commanding each of the defendants to appear and answer, but not under oath, all and singular the allegations of the bill; that an account be taken, under the direction of the court, to ascertain how much was due on the decree in the case of Kenicott v. Wayne County, supra, and also to ascertain the amount for which each tract of land involved in the suit was sold at the master's sale, with interest. It then continued as follows: "That said defendants, within a short time to be fixed by this court, pay to complainant the amount so found to be due on said decree, or, in the alternative, that each of said defendants pay to your orator the amount for which the land so claimed by each of said defendants was sold for at said master's sale, with the interest thereon, and in default of making such payment that your honor, by a decree of this court, declare the equity of redemption of said defendants be forever barred and foreclosed; and if your honor should deem it right and equitable that the equity of redemption of said defendants in and to said premises should be sold, then that your honor order the same to be sold in such manner as may seem best to your honor;" and concluded with a prayer for other and further relief, etc.

The second and third of the consolidated cases were brought on the same day as the first one, in the court below, and were similar in every respect to that one. The second one was brought by C. T. Austin, a citizen of New York, against Michael Book and four other defendants, all citizens of Illinois; and the third one was brought by John B. Cornell, also a citizen of New York, against Thomas J. Pettijohn and some fifty-five or more other defendants, all of whom were citizens of Illinois, except C. M. Wakefield, who was a citizen of Texas.

The fourth one was brought in the court below on the 26th of January, 1882, by Elizabeth H. Taylor, J. Sargent Smith and Arthur F. Gould, citizens of Massachusetts; Henry M. Alexander, administrator of the last will and testament of Peter McMartin, deceased; Joseph Waxelbaum and Charles A. Coe, citizens of New York; and William L. Rolston, a citizen of Ohio, against J. B. Bozarth and sixty-five other defendants, who were all citizens of Illinois; and was similar to the three preceding cases in every respect, except that the lands involved were described, and the name of the owner of each particular tract was set forth in the bill itself, instead of in an exhibit thereto, as was the case in the others.

These cases were consolidated by an order of court entered January 2, 1884, and were ordered to proceed as one case, under the title of the first one; and at the same time leave was given to amend the bills in all of the causes in order to make them harmonious.

By leave of the court, on the 4th day of April, 1884, Fernando B. Hane, a citizen of Ohio, filed his intervening petition in the case, as consolidated, against all of the defendants impleaded therein, and also against John J. Backman and one hundred and seventy-four other defendants, all citizens of Illinois, alleging substantially the same facts as did the preceding cases, with a like prayer and with an additional prayer for an injunction against a number of the defendants and their attorney, H. Tompkins, to restrain and enjoin them from prosecuting certain suits brought by them in the Circuit Court of Wayne County against certain vendees of petitioner based upon the claim that the aforesaid mortgage and deed of trust were invalid, and therefore not binding upon them, until the final hearing of this cause.

To these pleadings various defendants interposed demurrers, some filed separate answers, and the rest filed a joint answer. The main ground of defense was, that upon a similar state of facts to those alleged by complainants in this case the Supreme Court of Illinois, in Scates v. King, 110 Ill. 456, had affirmed a decree rendered by the Circuit Court of Wayne County in a case regularly brought before it, which held that a conveyance of a part of the lands sold at the mortgage sale aforesaid, made by a claimant under Broadwell, was a cloud upon the title thereto of a party claiming under a sale made by the county between the date of the execution of the before-mentioned mortgage and deed of trust and the commencement of the foreclosure proceedings, and should be set aside.

Replications having been filed, and also intervening petitions by W. S. Rolston, J. C. Cloyd and Lucinda A. Walker, the case was finally put at issue. Proofs were taken by the respective parties, and upon a hearing on the pleadings and proofs, the court below, on the 25th of January, 1886, rendered a decree finding the material facts substantially as we have recited them. The decree then set out and exhibited, in its seventh finding of facts, a list and schedule of the lands involved in this consolidated suit, "together with the names, respectively, of the several and respective persons to whom the County of Wayne sold its equity of redemption or residuary interest." That list and schedule further contained a statement of the present owners, respectively, of the title acquired by the master's sale aforesaid, which afterwards passed to Broadwell and from him by mesne conveyances; and also "a statement of the amounts, respectively, which were bid at said decretal sale for said tracts of land respectively."

The court then found as matter of law:

"1. That the opinions and decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the appeals heretofore prosecuted from the decrees of this court and reported in 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 452 [21: 319], and in 94 U. S. 498 [24: 360], are binding upon this court, and there is nothing in record or evidence in this case as consolidated to invalidate the said mortgage and trust deed or the respective amounts found due to the several parties to this suit as consolidated. Both the findings as to the said several amounts so found due should be sustained.

"2. The purchasers from Wayne County, after the recording of the mortgage, took the lands purchased by them severally subject to the lien of the mortgage, and the proceedings to foreclose the said trust deed and mortgage did not release or discharge this lien so long as the mortgage debt remains unsatisfied.

"3. The purchasers from the county, both after the recording of the mortgage and after the service of process on Wayne County on March 11, 1865, cannot acquire tax titles as against the mortgagees or those acquiring title under the foreclosure sale.

"4. That the master's deed under the decretal sale of September 18, 1877, transferred to the several purchasers thereat an equitable right to so much of the mortgage debt as was bid upon each tract severally.

"5. That the lis pendens as to purchasers from the county attaches from the 11th of March, A. D. 1865, the date of service of process on Wayne County, and that upon the facts averred in the several bills and sustained by the proofs the purchasers of lands at the decretal sale which were sold by Wayne County between April 20, 1859, and March 11, 1865, are entitled to file a bill in the nature of a supplemental bill against the parties holding title from the county subject to the mortgage to have the lien of the mortgage enforced by a decree of foreclosure."

The decree then continued as follows:

"That each of said owners of the said equity of redemption or residuary interest of the County of Wayne of, in and to said several tracts of land which were purchased from the county between April 20, 1859, and March 11, 1865, who have been summoned in this case, or who may have entered their voluntary appearance therein, or their assigns, respectively, each acting for himself or herself, and not for any other, may and shall redeem the respective tracts of land of which they, at date of service upon them, respectively, of process or entry of appearance, respectively, held and owned the equity of redemption, or residuary interest of the County of Wayne within or at the expiration of one year from this date, by paying into this court the amount for which each of said tracts of land was bid and sold at said decretal sale, for the use and benefit of the owners, respectively, under title deraigned from said decretal sale of the tract or tracts so redeemed, and that the judgment creditors, respectively, of any such persons so owning the equity of redemption may and shall redeem any tracts thereof in default of such parties so redeeming, at any time within three months of and after the expiration of said twelve months, by paying the amount so decreed to be redeemed from, in accordance with the Statutes of the State of Illinois concerning redemption from judicial sales; and it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the decree of foreclosure of June 25, 1874, hereinbefore referred to, shall be vacated and annulled as to each and every tract (but as to none others) thus redeemed as aforesaid, and that in default of redemption, as provided for herein as aforesaid, then and from the date of the expiration of such period of limitation all rights of such owners of the said equity of redemption, or their respective assigns, so failing to redeem shall be forever barred and foreclosed of their equities of redemption, respectively, and of all rights of, in and to said lands of any kind or nature adversely to the owners under title deraigned from said decretal sale, and that each and all of such defendants so being barred and foreclosed, and their agents, attorneys, solicitors and servants or assigns shall, from and after the expiration of said fifteen months, cease to exercise any acts of ownership over said lands, and shall at once thereafter vacate, abandon and leave the same, and not intermeddle any further therewith under pain of being considered in contempt of this court, and that the respective titles of said several and respective tracts of land not so redeemed shall be, and they are, confirmed in said several parties so owning the same by title deraigned from said decretal sale, as aforesaid, and their assigns, and that any tax deed or certificate to any tract of land, and not thus redeemed, which may belong to any such person thus entitled, but failing to redeem such tract, is hereby declared to be vacated, annulled and for nothing taken hereafter." (The italics are our own.)

On the same day that the decree was entered a motion for rehearing was filed, the first ground of which recited as follows: "That the result of the decree in said cause would be a great hardship to the respondents, as there is not enough in amount in any case to allow an appeal." This motion was denied on the 29th of March, 1886, but on the 31st of May following it was ordered by the court that said motion "stand continued until the next June Term" of the court. On the 10th of June following the motion for rehearing was again considered, and again denied, an order being entered "that the order of March 29th, 1886, denying the application for a rehearing of the cause, stand affirmed."

On the 18th of July, 1886, a motion was made to correct the decree by striking from it the names of thirty-seven of the defendants, thirty-four of whom, it was alleged, had neither entered their appearance nor been served with summons, and the other three had disclaimed; and on the 5th of August, 1886, a petition for summons and severance on appeal, and also an appeal bond, were filed by fifty-six of the defendants jointly.

It is clear that the appeal must be dismissed. The decree from which it is taken was not a joint decree, as is readily observed by a mere inspection of it. The liability of each one of the defendants under that decree can be neither increased nor diminished by any action on the part of any of his co-defendants. The right of every one of the defendants to appeal from the decree is separate and distinct from that of the other defendants. The amount adjudged against any one of them, in order that he might redeem his respective tract or tracts of land, does not in any case reach the amount necessary to give us jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. In no case is it $5,000.

In Ex parte Phoenix Ins. Co., 117 U. S. 367, 369 [29: 923, 924], Chief Justice Waite, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The rule is well settled that distinct decrees against distinct parties on distinct causes of action, or on a single cause of action in which there are distinct liabilities, cannot be joined to give this court jurisdiction on appeal,"—citing a long list of authorities. The question was finally put at rest in Gibson v. Shufeldt, 122 U. S. 27 [30: 1083], where, after a thorough examination of the subject, on principle, and an exhaustive review of the authorities bearing upon it, the court sustained a motion to dismiss an appeal similar in all its essential features to the motion in this case, and in concluding its opinion said: "This result, as we have seen, is in accordance with a long series of decisions of this court, extending over more than half a century. During that period Congress has often legislated on the subject of our appellate jurisdiction, without changing the phraseology which had received judicial construction. The court should not now unsettle a rule so long established and recognized." (pp. 39, 40 [1087, 1088]). See also McMurray v. Moran, at this term, 134 U. S. 150 [33: 814].

It is not necessary to multiply authorities upon a point so well settled. Neither do we think any of the points made by the appellants, in their brief, in opposition to the motion to dismiss, are well taken.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is granted.

JOHN H. MENDENHALL, Appt.,

v.

CLARK N. HALL ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 559-571.)

Citation, when not necessary to jurisdiction—practice—appeal, when brings up prior decree—defendants in mortgage suit—tender of taxes, when unnecessary—Louisiana Constitution—tax title, when may be questioned without direct suit to set it aside.

1. The jurisdiction of this court does not depend upon a citation being issued, where an appeal was allowed, an appeal bond executed and the record duly filed; but this court will not hear the cause until the parties are brought into court by citation.
2. The appeal in this case brings before us not only the final decree, but that sustaining the demurrer and plea of Charles F. Hall, and dismissing the suit as to him. It was not necessary to take an appeal from the latter order until after the whole case was determined in the court below.
3. In a suit to establish a mortgage, and for a sale thereunder, it is competent to unite as defendants both the mortgagor and the party claiming the property adversely to the lien of the mortgage, by virtue of proceedings for a sale for taxes had subsequently to its execution.
4. Where a mortgagor, who had agreed not to sell or encumber the property to the prejudice of the mortgage, has fraudulently combined with his brother to defeat the mortgage lien by means of a sale for taxes due from the mortgagor, at which sale the brother was to bid in the property, in his own name, for the benefit of the mortgagor, it is not necessary that the mortgagee, in order to maintain a suit to enforce his lien, should tender the amount of the taxes, with interest thereon, the nonpayment of which by the mortgagor had caused the sale to the prejudice of the mortgagee.
5. The Louisiana constitutional provision that "no sale of property for taxes shall be annulled for any informality in the proceedings until the price paid, with ten per cent interest, be tendered to the purchaser," has no application to such a case.
6. The principle that a tax title must be held good until it is annulled in a direct action applies only as to those titles that are bona fide, and are acquired without fraud, or that are real and not simulated.

Submitted Dec. 13, 1889. Decided April 7, 1890.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Louisiana in favor of plaintiff in an action to set aside a tax sale and establish a mortgage and for a sale of the land, adjudging that the plaintiff's demand for recognition of the mortgage be rejected and that he recover against one of the defendants certain moneys. Reversed, with directions to enter a decree establishing the mortgage and ordering a sale of the mortgaged property.

Statement by Mr. Justice Harlan:

By a deed executed December 24, 1875, John H. Mendenhall and wife, citizens of Ohio, conveyed to Clark N. Hall, a resident of Louisiana, an undivided one fourth of certain lands in Carroll Parish in that State, known as the Concord plantation. The price agreed to be paid was $5,128, for which the vendee executed to the grantor his three promissory notes, the first one for $2,000, payable January 1, 1877; the second for a like sum, payable January 1, 1878; and the third for $1,128, payable January 1, 1879; each note bearing interest at the rate of eight per cent per annum from date until paid. In order to secure the payment of the principal and interest of those notes, the grantee, by the same instrument, mortgaged and hypothecated the property for the benefit of the vendor, or any future holder or holders of the notes, "binding and obligating himself not to sell, mortgage or in any wise incur said property to the prejudice of this act of mortgage."

The deed was duly filed for record in the proper office on the day of its date.

By an indenture executed February 10, 1876, the owners of the Concord plantation, William C. White, James Andrews and Clark N. Hall, made a partition thereof among themselves.

On the 5th of March, 1882,—no part of the principal sum having been paid and the interest only having been paid up to January 1, 1879—Clark N. Hall wrote to Mendenhall, giving the reasons why he had not for some time made a payment. After stating that he and his brother had tried together to make arrangements to meet his notes and that they had been compelled, in order to run the plantation, to deposit what money they had as security for aid supplied by others, he said: "So we deposited the money we had and are going ahead, and I can assure you it has given me a heap more pain than it has you; and one more thing I can assure you, I am going to attend strictly to business, and am going to get as little as possible, and work to best advantage, and I know this fall will be able to make you a payment that will satisfy you. My aim is to pay you the $2,500 this fall without a doubt; with what I have left out of the place, and what Charley will be able to raise then, we can do it like a flash, and to do it now will be a stop to all things. . . . So, under the circumstances, I am not going to pay one dollar now, and if it don't suit you I cannot, for the life of me, help it. If you had rather resort to law, all right. If not, wait until fall with patience and I am sure everything will be made O. K. . . . Everybody predicts a good crop year. Has Mrs. M. received my package of photos? I mailed them, and wrote her a letter some months ago. Hoping you will have compassion upon a poor soul, I will close, by subscribing myself," etc. By way of further assurance that the representations as to his financial condition were true, and that his request for time was made in good faith, he adds, by way of postscript, these words: "I want you to bear in mind that if W. B. Keene had not failed to comply with his contract I would surely have remitted the money. You may believe me or not; nevertheless it is the candid truth."

On the same day of the above letter, Charles F. Hall, a brother of Clark N. Hall, and the person described in that letter as "Charley," wrote to Mendenhall, saying: "I take the liberty to pen you a few lines in regard to Concord and the business pertaining thereto. Some time ago Clark took the trouble and expense upon himself to go up and see you to try and effect a settlement. At that time you could just as well as not have had $2,500 in cash; but it appears you would not take that. Well, since then things have changed here, so that it is going to be impossible for us to do anything until, say, January 1, 1888, for the following reasons, viz.: W. B. Keene, a merchant doing business close to Concord, had arranged to supply Clark this year, but about two weeks ago failed in a manner; anyway, his commission merchants in N. O. say they will not advance him supplies for more than enough to run his own place; therefore it will necessarily compel us to take our money to run the place. I presume Clark has written you about this ere now, and also that he had rented Andrews' portion of the place. You can certainly see that it would be of no use to pay you the amount agreed to and then have no way or means of running the place, for we could make no other payments, as the place would lay idle and would therefore bring in no revenue. The way everything is now fixed the place will bring it in rent. I am here working for $1,000 a year and all my expenses paid, and by January 1, 1888, we can and will pay you $2,500. I have been here for two years and have saved nearly all my salary—and for what? To try and help Clark pay you for the place. I am anxious to settle this matter up, and you have been very kind in waiting as long as you have, and you have my word and honor that you shall be paid this fall the $2,500 if the levee does not break at or near Concord. You can satisfy yourself by writing to Mr. Benjamin Keene, or anyone that knows anything about our affairs here, whether I have written how things are here or not. And I feel safe in here saying that you will look at this matter just as I have, and think we have done just the best that could have been done under the existing circumstances. Please let me hear from you on this subject and I shall take pleasure in keeping you posted about things here, and you can depend on my doing all I can to help pay up. Please remember me kindly to Mrs. M., and with best wishes and trusting to hear from you ere long, I remain yours resp."

On the 17th of January, 1888, the land was sold for state and parish taxes due from Clark N. Hall for the years 1877 and 1878, and was purchased at the sum of $211.47 by Charles F. Hall, who took a deed from the sheriff.

The present suit was brought on the 4th of September, 1888, by Mendenhall against Clark N. Hall and Charles F. Hall. After setting out the above facts in relation to the purchase by Clark N. Hall, the execution of the notes for the price, the partition of the plantation among the owners and the payment of the interest up to January 1, 1879, the bill alleges that Clark N. Hall had indulgence from the plaintiff from year to year, and visited the latter at his home in Ohio about the first of the year 1882, promising while there that upon his return home he would make a payment of $1,500 on the notes; that after his return he and his brother Charles entered into a scheme to defraud the plaintiff; that with knowledge that the sheriff would be compelled by the Statute of the State (Act No. 38 of 1882) to sell the property for unpaid taxes within four months after the promulgation of that Act, Clark N. Hall fraudulently failed to pay the taxes for 1877 and 1878, although he had agreed not to encumber the property to the prejudice of the plaintiff or the said act of mortgage, and although he represented to the plaintiff that he had paid the taxes on the land; that Clark N. Hall and Charles F. Hall agreed between themselves that, in order to defeat the plaintiff's rights, the latter would become the purchaser at the tax sale and take the title in his own name, intending thereby to procure the release of the property from the plaintiff's mortgage and privilege; and that although Charles F. Hall pretends to have bought the property and claims to be the owner thereof, his brother was living on the plantation and cultivating it as before the tax sale. The bill stated various grounds upon which the tax sale should be declared null and void, and prayed that the sale be set aside; that the plaintiff's mortgage and vendor's privilege to secure the balance due on the notes, together with the accruing interest, be recognized and rendered executory; that the land be sold by due process of law, to pay and satisfy that balance; and that he might have such relief as was proper.

Charles F. Hall demurred to the bill for multifariousness and filed a special plea to effect that, by article 210 of the Constitution of Louisiana, tax titles are declared to be prima facie valid, and cannot be set aside without a previous tender to the purchaser of the price and ten per cent per annum interest thereon, having been made, which has not been done.

Clark N. Hall pleaded to so much of the bill as sought judgment against him for the amount of the notes, that equity was without jurisdiction ratione materiae to try the issues presented on said obligations.

The court below sustained both the demurrer and the plea of Charles F. Hall, and by a decree entered May 12, 1885, dismissed the bill as to him, without prejudice to the plaintiff's right to file a new bill. It overruled the demurrer of Clark N. Hall, and the latter filed an answer, averring that he was no longer the owner of the premises, nor in possession thereof. He also averred that he was the lawful owner of two judgments against the plaintiff, one for $300 and $4.15 costs taxed, and one for $240, with interest from April 4, 1876, and $4.70 costs taxed, both rendered May 12, 1876, by a justice of the peace in Delaware County, Ohio, in favor of the Elkart Wood Pulp Company, against John H. Mendenhall and others, partners doing business under the firm name of the Delaware Paper Company. He also averred that he was the legal holder and owner of a note for $1,733.61 executed by the said Delaware Paper Company, through their secretary, J. L. Klein, and made payable to the order of Jacob A. Sharer, who indorsed it to James Andrews, the latter indorsing it in blank to the defendant in due course of trade and for a valuable consideration. He pleaded the said demands "in compensation of the notes sued upon."

To this answer a replication was filed, in which the plaintiff denied that he was bound for the payment of the obligations set up in the answer; denied that they were owned by the defendant; and averred, in respect to the note for $1,733.61, that it was executed and obtained by fraud, was without consideration, was never negotiated or placed on the market until after its maturity, and was not a just debt against the Delaware Paper Company. A replication of this special character was not in accordance with correct chancery practice. But no objection was made on that ground, and it was treated as a proper replication.

Upon final hearing, on the 14th of April, 1886, the court gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff against Clark N. Hall for $5,123, with interest at the rate of eight per cent per annum from December 24, 1875, until paid, and the costs, that amount to be credited with $1,340.52 to date January 1, 1879, and also with $544.15 with eight per cent interest from April 4, 1876, to date and take effect from May 9, 1879. It also adjudged that the plaintiff's demand for recognition of the mortgage and vendor's privilege claimed in the bill be rejected as in case of nonsuit without prejudice to his right to assert the same in a subsequent action.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

It is suggested that no appeal has been taken as to Charles F. Hall, and that this court is without jurisdiction over the cause as to him. In this view we do not concur. The cause was not finally disposed of as to Clark N. Hall, the remaining defendant, until the 14th of April, 1886, and on the 30th day of the same month the plaintiff was allowed an appeal "in the cause." His appeal bond was executed September 9, 1886, and ran "to the defendants." The record was filed here on the 12th of October, 1886. It appearing, when the case was reached on our docket, that Charles F. Hall had not been served with notice of the appeal, a citation was directed to be served upon him, or, if he was dead, upon his representative. The citation was executed January 13, 1890, upon his widow, who is also administratrix of his estate. There is no ground to question the jurisdiction of this court to proceed to a hearing of the appeal. The record was filed in this court on the day to which the appeal was returnable. Our jurisdiction did not depend upon a citation being issued (Evans v. State Nat. Bank, 134 U. S. 380 [83: 917]), although we could not properly proceed to hear the case until Charles F. Hall, as to whom the suit was dismissed in 1885, or his representative, was brought into court by citation. Rev. Civ. Code La. arts. 1041, 1049, 1155; McCalop v. Fluker, 12 La. Anh. 345. And the appeal brings before us not only the final decree of 1886, but that of 1885 sustaining the demurrer and plea of Charles F. Hall, and dismissing the suit as to him. It was not necessary to take an appeal from the latter order until after the whole case was determined in the court below. For these reasons the objections to our jurisdiction are overruled.

The first question, upon the merits, to be considered, relates to the demurrer and plea of Charles F. Hall. It is contended that he was not a necessary party to the suit to fix the amount of the indebtedness of Clark N. Hall, and that the demurrer, for that reason, was properly sustained. If that had been the sole object of the suit the plaintiff could undoubtedly have proceeded at law against Clark N. Hall alone. But such a suit would not have given the relief required. The plaintiff claimed a lien on the mortgaged property to secure the payment of the notes given by the mortgagor. The property was claimed by Charles F. Hall in virtue of a tax sale. While the latter might have been proceeded against alone for the purpose of determining whether his right to the land was not subordinate to the mortgage lien, it was competent, under the practice in equity prevailing in the courts of the United States, and in order that full and adequate relief might be had, to unite in the same suit both the mortgagor and the party claiming the property adversely to the lien of the mortgage, by virtue of proceedings had subsequently to its execution. If the plaintiff was entitled to have the property sold in satisfaction of the debt secured by the mortgage, it was his right to have it sold freed from any apparent claim thereon wrongly asserted by the holder of the tax title. Such relief could not be had without making the latter a party to the suit.

In respect to the plea of Charles F. Hall, we are of opinion that it ought not to have been sustained. The constitutional provisions that "all deeds of sale made, or that may be made, by the collector of taxes, shall be received by the courts in evidence as prima facie valid sales," and that "no sale of property for taxes shall be annulled for any informality in the proceedings until the price paid, with ten per cent interest, be tendered to the purchaser," have no application to cases like the present one. If Clark N. Hall had attempted to have the tax sale set aside for mere informality, it would have been a good plea in bar to any suit by him against the purchaser, that he had not tendered the amount paid by him, with interest thereon—the plea showing distinctly the amount so paid. Barrow v. Lapene, 30 La. Ann. 310; Blanton v. Ludeling, 30 La. Ann. 1232. It is to suits of that character that the authorities cited apply. The case before us is altogether different. It proceeds upon the ground that a mortgagor who had agreed "not to sell, mortgage or in any wise incumber the property," to the prejudice of the mortgage, had fraudulently combined with his brother to defeat the mortgage lien by means of a sale for taxes due from the mortgagor, at which sale the brother was to bid in the property, in his own name, and, for the protection of the mortgagor, assert his absolute ownership of it. It certainly was not intended that the mortgagee, in order to maintain a suit to enforce his lien, should tender to the mortgagor, or to his agent, the amount of the taxes, with interest thereon, the nonpayment of which by the mortgagor had caused the sale to the prejudice of the mortgagee.

The case, in many respects, is like Austin v. Citizens Bank, 30 La. Ann. 689, 691, in which it appeared that a mortgage creditor proceeded directly against the mortgaged property which had been sold for taxes, and the title taken in the name of a third person. The holder of the tax title brought a suit to enjoin such proceeding. The court said: "The plaintiff [the holder of the tax title] entrenches himself behind our ruling in Lannes v. Workmen's Bank, 29 La. Ann. 112, and insists that his title must be held good until it is annulled in a direct action. But that principle holds good only as to those titles that are bona fide, and are acquired without fraud, or that are real and not simulated. Unquestionably a purchaser at a tax sale may acquire a good title to a valuable property for a small price, if the requisite formalities have preceded and attended the sale. . . . But no government will permit its machinery, constructed to enforce the payment of public dues to the fisc, to be used to manipulate a fraud, and if the purchaser is a party to the fraud he must share its punishment. It might be very different if he were wholly disconnected and unacquainted with it. The purchase by Moss was nothing more or less than a purchase by Mrs. Austin, the debtor and mortgagor, through her son, the plaintiff. The money paid as the price at the tax sale was only what she, as the owner of the property, owed the State, and what she honestly and in good conscience ought to have paid without, and before, and to prevent, a sale. If she could not pay it, the debt being exigent and of so high a rank, she should have acquainted her creditor and mortgagee with its imminence, instead of observing the suspicious reticence which characterized her conduct. The creditor's rights, as mortgagee and vendor, cannot be imperiled by the mortgagor's collusive combination with others to interpose an apparent but fraudulent obstacle in his way in enforcing those rights."

All that was said in that case is pertinent to the one before us. The mortgagor had obtained liberal indulgence as to time from the mortgagee. He made such representations of his embarrassed financial condition as induced the mortgagee to forbear taking steps to enforce his lien upon the property. He gave positive assurances that he would make a payment of twenty-five hundred dollars on the mortgage debt by the fall of 1883. He knew that there were taxes upon the property which it was his duty to pay, and that their nonpayment endangered the security upon which his generous creditor depended for the payment of the notes given for the property. And his brother, with many expressions of friendship for the mortgagee and his family, joined in the appeals for time, assuring the mortgagee that he would himself assist in meeting the mortgagor's engagements to pay, if the mortgagee would wait until January 1, 1883. He voluntarily promised that he would keep the mortgagee "posted about things." But neither the mortgagor nor his brother informed the mortgagee that the land was advertised to be sold for the taxes which the mortgagor was under a duty to pay. The way in which Charles F. Hall complied with his promise to keep the plaintiff posted was to withhold information as to the tax sale, buy the land for the amount of the taxes and take the title in his own name. The evidence leaves no doubt that the nonpayment of taxes by the mortgagor, and the purchase of the property by his brother, was in execution of a scheme upon their part to defeat the mortgagor's lien upon the land.

In respect to the credits allowed by the decree below upon his notes to the mortgagor, no error was committed. The credit of $1,340.52, as of January 1, 1879, was a trifling amount in excess of the aggregate interest that had been paid by the mortgagor up to that date. The credit of $544.15 was for the amount of the two judgments rendered against Mendenhall by a justice of the peace in Ohio, of which Clark N. Hall became the owner on the 9th of May, 1879. The plaintiff being a nonresident of Louisiana it was proper to allow that amount as a set-off against the notes. Spinney v. Hyde, 16 La. Ann. 250; Woolfolk v. The Graham's Polly, 18 La. Ann. 698. As to the note for $1,788.61 dated June 1, 1875, and executed by the Delaware Paper Company, the court below properly disallowed it as a set-off. The evidence clearly showed that it was not an enforceable obligation against that company. The attempt to use it against Mendenhall is only additional evidence of the purpose to defraud him. But, for the reason stated, the court below erred in rejecting the plaintiff's demand for recognition of the mortgage lien upon the property.

To the extent indicated the decree is reversed, with directions to enter a decree recognizing and establishing the mortgage of December 24, 1875, as against Clark N. Hall, and the succession of Charles F. Hall, and as giving a lien in behalf of the plaintiff superior and paramount to any right which the succession of Charles F. Hall has in the mortgaged property by virtue of the sale for taxes and the sheriff's deed to him, and ordering a sale of the mortgaged property to satisfy the above balance due the plaintiff upon the notes given by Clark N. Hall.

The case was argued upon its merits on Jan. 30, 1890, by Mr. R. W. De Forest for plaintiff in error, no counsel for defendants in error appearing upon such argument. Subsequently defendants in error were given leave to file briefs and they also filed a motion to dismiss the writ of error.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frank Bergen, for defendants in error, in support of motion to dismiss:

Courts will not entertain jurisdiction of cases when there is no real or substantial controversy between the parties.

The facts on this motion can properly be brought before the court by affidavits.

Cleveland v. Chamberlain, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 419 (17: 98); Lord v. Veazie, 49 U. S. 8 How. 251 (12: 1067).

Messrs. Robert W. DeForest, George R. Kaercher and Benjamin Williamson, for plaintiff in error, in opposition to motion.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a writ of certiorari issued out of the Supreme Court of the State of New Jersey, on the 6th of November, 1882, at the instance of Henry S. Little, receiver of the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, a corporation of that State, commanding Samuel D. Bowers, comptroller of the City of Elizabeth, and the City of Elizabeth, to certify and send to that court their proceedings relative to an assessment of certain taxes made by that City upon real property of the Company within the city limits, particularly described in the writ, for the year 1876.

Upon the hearing of the case in that court, the investigation extended to like assessments made by the City for the years 1877 to 1882, inclusive; and the judgment of the court was, that the assessments should stand affirmed. That judgment having been affirmed by the Court of Errors and Appeals of the State, this writ of error was prosecuted. The federal question involved is as to whether these assessments impaired the obligation of a contract which the Company claimed existed between it and the State by virtue of an Act of the State Legislature, approved March 17, 1854, and were therefore violative of sec. 10, art. 1, of the Constitution of the United States.

After the argument of the case in this court upon its merits, the defendants in error were given leave to file briefs, a privilege of which they availed themselves; and they also filed a motion to dismiss the writ of error. This motion is based upon the following grounds:

First. Because the taxes levied on the property of the Company in the City of Elizabeth in and for the years 1876 to 1882, inclusive, being the same taxes mentioned in the record in this cause, have been paid and satisfied in full since the writ of error was issued, together with the costs in the case.

Second. Because the writ of error is being prosecuted by the plaintiff in error for the sole purpose of obtaining the opinion of this court as to the validity of an alleged contract on the subject of taxation between the State of New Jersey and the Company, and the State is not a party in the form or sense in which a party in interest must be a party to a litigation in order to be bound by the judgment of the court.

Third. Because the plaintiff in error does not owe any taxes to the City of Elizabeth, to Samuel D. Bowers, the former comptroller of the City, or to any existing officer of the City, nor does the Company owe any sum of money to the City for taxes.

Fourth. Because all claims for taxes heretofore made or held by the City of Elizabeth, or any officer thereof, against the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, or the property of the Company, or any receiver of it, have been adjusted, compromised and paid in full, voluntarily, by the Railroad Company or its appropriate officer or representative.

The motion is supported by a number of affidavits of the tax officers of the City of Elizabeth, including the present comptroller, and the commissioners of adjustment. From these affidavits it appears that, during the year 1887, by virtue of a Statute of the State passed in 1886, the commissioners of adjustment for the City of Elizabeth readjusted and reduced, to a considerable extent, the taxes levied by the City upon the property of the Railroad Company for the years 1876 to 1882, inclusive, and also for the year 1883; that during the progress of that revision and readjustment, H. W. Douty, real estate agent of the Company, appeared before the commissioners, from time to time, and urged the reduction of the claims of the City for taxes against the property of the Company; that after the adjustment had been completed, the taxes were paid by the Railroad Company, before interest on them began to accrue under the Act by virtue of which the adjustment was made; that no warrant was issued or other step or proceeding taken by or on the part of the City for the collection of the taxes prior to the time of payment, nor could any proceedings have been taken to enforce their payment for several months thereafter; and that no protest against the payment, or objection thereto, was made by the Company, or any person acting on its behalf. It appears that, during the progress of the readjustment, the commissioners committed an error by including therein certain taxes for the years 1884, 1885 and 1886. Douty requested them by letter to correct that error, saying, "If this is done, I am satisfied the adjustment will be promptly paid after confirmation." The correction was made as requested, and the taxes thus readjusted and reduced—the same taxes here in dispute—were paid by the Company, as above set forth.

As regards the costs of the proceedings in the court below, it seems they were paid under the following circumstances: After the judgment of the court of errors and appeals had been rendered, an entry was made upon its record, reciting the fact that the judgment of the supreme court had been affirmed at the costs of the plaintiff in error, and further ordering that the record and proceedings be remitted to the Supreme Court of the State, to be proceeded with in accordance with law and the practice of the court. As the counsel for the plaintiff in error supposed that that form of the judgment would preclude the taking of a writ of error from this court, by an arrangement between counsel for both parties the record was changed to its present form, and the costs in the case were then paid by the plaintiff in error.

As opposed to this motion, there is no denial of the fact that the taxes in dispute have been paid. It is insisted, however, that such payment was not voluntary, but was made under duress, as the only means of avoiding execution; and that payments were made before suit brought only when imposed by the court as a condition for being permitted to bring suit, and after suit brought, only to save property from sale in the absence of any stay or possibility of getting one. But an examination of the affidavit of the principal attorney for the Railroad Company, filed here, discloses the fact that the taxes which are referred to in this connection are the taxes assessed for the years 1884 to 1887, inclusive. In the case of those taxes, the proceedings for their collection were regulated by an Act of the New Jersey Legislature passed in 1884, which in its 16th section provided that if any company should desire to contest the validity of any tax levied thereunder, such contest should be made by certiorari, which might be granted "on such terms as the justice or court granting the writ may impose."

But that Act and the proceedings for the collection of taxes under it are in nowise before the court in this case. In the nature of things the proceedings which the attorney describes could not have applied to the collection of the taxes for the years 1876 to 1882, inclusive, for this suit which relates to them was disposed of by the Supreme Court of the State long before the Act of 1884 was passed. There is nothing in the record to show that the payment of the taxes in dispute was imposed by the court as a condition precedent to the Company's right to bring suit to test their legality. In fact, no such condition was imposed, or could have been imposed, when this suit was brought; for there was no statute of the State at that time giving any such power to the court.

In respect to the taxes here in dispute, it is claimed that they were also paid involuntarily, because, under the Readjustment Act of 1886, the readjustment made by the commissioners was "final and conclusive upon all persons, became immediately due, was collectible by the comptroller without interest, if paid within sixty days, and, if not paid within six months, it was made the comptroller's mandatory duty to sell the lands assessed, at public auction, to the highest bidder, and the purchaser at such sale obtained title by fee simple absolute."

We do not think the payment of the taxes, under the circumstances detailed in the affidavits before referred to, and admitted substantially by plaintiff in error, was an involuntary payment, or a payment under duress, within the meaning of the law. In Wabaunsee County v. Walker, 8 Kan. 431, cited with approval in Lamborn v. County Commissioners, 97 U. S. 181 [24:926], and also in Railroad Co. v. Commissioners, 98 U. S. 541, 548 [25:196, 197], it was said: "Where a party pays an illegal demand with a full knowledge of all the facts which render such demand illegal, without an immediate and urgent necessity therefor, or unless to release his person or property from detention, or to prevent an immediate seizure of his person or property, such payment must be deemed voluntary, and cannot be recovered back. And the fact that the party, at the time of making the payment, files a written protest, does not make the payment involuntary."

The case in 98 U. S., supra, was a suit by the Union Pacific Railroad Company to recover taxes it had paid upon certain of its lands granted to it by Act of Congress. The lands had been assessed by the county in which they lay for general and local taxes, and in due time the tax lists, with warrants attached for their collection, were delivered to the treasurer of the county. The warrants authorized the treasurer, if default should be made in the payment of any of the taxes charged upon the list, to seize and sell the personal property of the persons making the default, to enforce the collection. Under the law of Nebraska no demand of taxes was necessary, but it was the duty of every person subject to taxation to attend the treasurer's office and make payment. The company paid the taxes before any demand had been made for their collection, and before any special effort had been put forth by the treasurer to enforce their collection, at the same time filing with the treasurer a written protest against their payment, for the reason that they were illegally and wrongfully assessed, and were unauthorized by law, and gave notice that suit would be instituted to recover back the money paid. In delivering the opinion of the court, Mr. Chief Justice Waite said: "The real question in this case is, whether there was such an immediate and urgent necessity for the payment of the taxes in controversy as to imply that it was made upon compulsion. The treasurer had a warrant in his hands which would have authorized him to seize the goods of the company to enforce the collection. This warrant was in the nature of an execution running against the property of the parties charged with taxes upon the lists it accompanied, and no opportunity had been afforded the parties of obtaining a judicial decision of the question of their liability. As to this class of cases Chief Justice Shaw states the rule, in Preston v. Boston, 12 Pick. 14, as follows: 'When, therefore, a party not liable to taxation is called upon peremptorily to pay upon such a warrant, and he can save himself and his property in no other way than by paying the illegal demand, he may give notice that he so pays it by duress and not voluntarily, and, by showing that he is not liable, recover it back as money had and received.' This we think, is the true rule, but it falls far short of what is required in this case. No attempt has been made by the treasurer to serve his warrant. He had not even personally demanded the taxes from the Company, and certainly nothing had been done from which his intent could be inferred to use the legal process he held to enforce the collection, if the alleged illegality of the claim was made known to him. All that appears is, that the Company was charged upon the tax lists with taxes upon its real and personal property in the county. After all the taxes had become delinquent under the law, but before any active steps whatever had been taken to enforce their collection, the Company presented itself at the treasurer's office, and in the usual course of business paid in full everything that was charged against it, accompanying the payment, however, with a general protest against the legality of the charges, and a notice that suit would be commenced to recover back the full amount that was paid. No specification of alleged illegality was made, and no particular property designated as wrongfully included in the assessment of the taxes. The protest was in the most general terms, and evidently intended to cover every defect that might thereafter be discovered, either in the power to tax or the manner of executing the power. . . . Under such circumstances we cannot hold that the payment was compulsory, in such a sense as to give a right to the present action." See also Dillon on Municipal Corporations, secs. 941-947, and cases there cited.

The reasoning of the court in that case applies equally to the facts of this. In no sense do we think the payment of the taxes in suit was made under duress. Their payment, under the circumstances above set forth, was in the nature of a compromise, by which the City agreed to take, and the Company agreed to pay, a less sum than was originally assessed. The effect of this act was to extinguish the controversy between the parties to this suit.

This case is clearly distinguishable from Robertson v. Bradbury, 132 U. S. 491 [83: 405]. In that case the jury, by returning a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, virtually found that he had been compelled to pay the illegal duties assessed against his goods by the collector of the Port at New York in order to get possession of them from the collector. Here there is no question as to the seizure of goods at all. The lands which had been assessed were still in the possession and under the control of the Railroad Company. No warrant had been issued against them, and no active steps had been taken by the City to enforce the collection of the taxes assessed, nor could any such proceedings have been resorted to by the City for at least several months thereafter. Moreover, the question of the validity of the taxes was involved in pending litigation.

It is true that the judgment of the court below stands unsatisfied except so far as relates to the costs, which, as before stated, have been paid; but that is immaterial, inasmuch as the controversy upon which that judgment was rendered had been extinguished. That in effect satisfied the judgment. Neither the affirmance nor the reversal of that judgment would make any difference as regards the controversy brought here by this writ of error. It matters not that the taxes from 1884 to 1887, inclusive, were paid under duress. They are in no wise before the court; and according to the showing of the plaintiff in error they differ materially from the taxes in dispute in this case.

It is well settled that, when there is no actual controversy, involving real and substantial rights, between the parties to the record, the case will be dismissed. In Lord v. Veazie, 49 U. S. 8 How. 251 [12: 1067], a writ of error was dismissed by this court where it appeared from affidavits and other evidence by persons not parties to the suit that there was no real controversy between the plaintiff and defendant, but that the suit was instituted to procure the opinion of this court upon a question of law, in the decision of which they had a common interest opposed to that of other persons, who were not parties to the suit, and had no knowledge of its pendency in the circuit court. Chief Justice Taney, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It is the office of courts of justice to decide the rights of persons and of property, when the persons interested cannot adjust them by agreement between themselves, and to do this upon the full hearing of both parties. And any attempt, by a mere colorable dispute, to obtain the opinion of the court upon a question of law which a party desires to know for his own interest or his own purposes, when there is no real and substantial controversy between those who appear as adverse parties to the suit, is an abuse which courts of justice have always reprehended, and treated as a punishable contempt of court."

In Cleveland v. Chamberlain, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 419 [17: 98], the rule laid down in Lord v. Veazie, supra, was adhered to, and held applicable to a case in which it appeared that the appellant had purchased and taken an assignment of all the appellee's interest in the decree appealed from; and the appeal was dismissed.

In Wood Paper Co. v. Heft, 75 U. S. 8 Wall, 333 [19: 378], an appeal upon a bill for the infringement of a patent was dismissed, it having been made to appear to the court that, after the appeal, the appellants had purchased a certain patent from the defendants under which the defendants sought to protect themselves; and that the defendants, as compensation, had taken stock in the company which was the appellant in the case. And it was further held that the fact that damages for the infringement alleged in the bill had not been compromised did not affect the propriety of the dismissal.

In San Mateo County v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 116 U. S. 138 [29: 589], a writ of error was dismissed where it appeared that the taxes assessed against the company had been paid to the county after the suit had been commenced, the court resting its judgment upon the reason that there was no longer an existing cause of action in favor of the county against the railroad company. To the same effect see Henkin v. Gueres, 12 East, 247; Re Elam, 3 Barn. & C. 597; Smith v. Junction R. Co. 29 Ind. 546; Essex County v. Union County, 44 N. J. L. 438.

A further defense urged against this motion is laches. It is urged that the facts upon which it is based were known to the defendants in error at least two years ago, and that any objection to the writ of error should have been made before the argument of the case upon its merits. It is also insisted, incidentally, that the motion was filed in violation of professional courtesy, inasmuch as it was through the intercession of the attorney for the plaintiff in error that an extension of time was allowed the defendants in error within which they could be heard on brief, after the argument on the merits.

We do not think, however, the question of laches has any bearing upon this question. The fact that there is no controversy between parties to the record ought, in the interest of a pure administration of justice, to be allowed to be shown at any time before the decision of the case. Any other rule would put it in the power of designing persons to bring up a feigned issue in order to obtain a decision of this court upon a question involving the rights of others who have had no opportunity to be heard.

If, as is contended on behalf of the plaintiff in error, the question involved in this case is one of great importance to the Railroad Company and to the State, and is identical with that in a number of other cases pending in the court below, so much the more important is it that it should not be decided in a case where there is nothing in dispute. Nor is it material that the case was selected by the plaintiff in error and agreed to by the defendant in error before the writ of error was prosecuted, as one in which the question of taxation under the New Jersey statutes could be fully considered and finally decided by this court; for it is well understood that consent does not confer jurisdiction.

For the reasons above stated the motion to dismiss the writ of error is granted at the costs in this court of the plaintiff in error.

It is so ordered.

BROWN, BONNELL & COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
THE LAKE SUPERIOR IRON COMPANY ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 530-536.)

Technical objection, acquiesced in, will not be given effect—want of jurisdiction, in equity—when objection must be taken—power of court—objection that complainant has remedy at law.

1. A debtor, to destroy equality and accomplish partiality, cannot ignore its long acquiescence and plead an unsubstantial technicality to overthrow protracted, extensive and costly proceedings, carried on in reliance upon its consent.
2. If the objection of want of jurisdiction in equity is not taken in proper time, namely, before the defendant enters into his defense at large, the court, having the general jurisdiction, will exercise it.
3. The court, for its own protection, may prevent matters purely cognizable at law from being drawn into chancery at the pleasure of the parties interested.
4. But where the subject matter belongs to the class over which a court of equity has jurisdiction, and the objection that the complainant has an adequate remedy at law is not made until the hearing in the appellate tribunal, it comes too late, even though, if taken in time, it might have been worthy of attention.

Argued March 24, 1890. Decided April 7, 1890.
184 U. S. U. S., Book 33.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio in favor of complainants in an action in equity for the appointment of a receiver of a corporation decreeing the amount of indebtedness of its creditors and that upon default in payment the property be sold in satisfaction thereof. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry Crawford, for appellant:

This suit was of such a character that the circuit court was prohibited from exercising any jurisdiction.

N. Y. Guar. Co. v. Water Works Co. 107 U. S. 20 (27: 484); Rev. Stat. § 728.

The judicial power of the United States is not to be exerted in a case to which it does not extend, even if all parties desire to have it extended.

Thompson v. Central Ohio R. Co. 78 U. S. 6 Wall. 184 (18: 765); Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Swan, 111 U. S. 379 (28: 462).

Judicial duty requires that the court at any stage of the cause shall enforce the prohibition, ex sponte, wholly independent of the pleadings or wishes or conduct of the parties.

Grand Chute v. Winegar, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 874 (21: 174); Killian v. Ebbinghaus, 110 U. S. 568 (28: 246); Root v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 105 U. S. 206 (26: 981); Fussell v. Gregg, 118 U. A federal court has no equitable cognizance of such a suit, because the legal remedy was ample and apparent.

A court of equity, at the instance of the proper parties, will then make those funds trust funds which, in other circumstances, are as much the absolute property of the corporation as any man's property is his.

134 U. S.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

On February 20, 1883, two of the appellees, the Lake Superior Iron Company and the Jackson Iron Company, together with the Negaunee Concentrating Company, filed their bill against the appellant, in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio. The appellant was a corporation, created under the laws of the State of Ohio, and each of the complainants was a creditor, two holding claims evidenced by notes not then due, and the other, the Negaunee Concentrating Company, holding a judgment. The prayer of the bill was for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the property and assets of the defendant, and for such other and further relief as was proper. On the same day the defendant entered its appearance, and accepted service of notice of a motion for the appointment of a receiver; and Fayette Brown was thereupon immediately appointed receiver. On the next day subpoena was served on the defendant. On March 28 a supplemental bill was filed making other parties defendants, and on June 14 an order pro confesso was entered against all of the defendants in the original and supplemental bills. On April 28 an order was entered directing all creditors to file their claims by petition, and on October 20 nearly every creditor had appeared and filed his petition. On July 17 an order was entered appointing a special master to report on the claims of creditors and marshal the liens thereof.

Up to the 28d of November, the appellant made no opposition to the proceeding, and apparently assented to the action which was being taken by the creditors, looking to the appropriation of its property to the payment of their claims. On that day a change took place in its attitude towards this suit. It went into the state courts and confessed judgment in behalf of several of its creditors; and on the 24th deposited in the registry of the circuit court money enough to pay off the judgment in favor of the Concentrating Company, and filed two pleas—one setting forth the fact of payment, and the other that the original and supplemental bills disclosed that the complainants had a plain, adequate and complete remedy at law; and that therefore the court, sitting as a court of equity, had no jurisdiction; and praying a dismissal of the bills. Subsequently, on December 18, it filed a motion to discharge the receiver. This motion was overruled, the pleas seem to have been ignored, the master reported upon the claims presented, and on February 23, 1886, the court entered a decree which, finding the indebtedness to be as stated by the master, also what property was in possession of the receiver, decreed that upon default in the payment of those debts the property be sold in satisfaction thereof. From this decree the defendant has brought this appeal; and its principal contention is, that the circuit court had no jurisdiction whatever over the subject matter of the suit, because it appeared upon the face of the bills, original and supplemental, that the complainants had a plain, adequate and complete remedy at law.

As heretofore stated, the bill showed that two of the complainants held claims not yet due and the third only a judgment with no execution. The supplemental bill alleged that execution had, since the filing of the original bill, been issued on that judgment, and returned nulla bona. The original bill, besides disclosing the nature of complainants' claims, set forth that they were proceeding not alone in their own behalf, but in that of all other creditors, whose number was so great as to make it impossible to join them as parties; it then averred the insolvency of the defendant; that it was engaged in large and various business, manufacturing and mining; that its plant and good will was of great extent and value; and that it employed operatives to the number of at least four thousand; and then alleged as follows: "And your orators further say that vexatious litigation has been commenced against the said defendant, and many more such are threatened, and that such litigations are accompanied by attachments and seizures of property, and such threatened litigations will also be accompanied by attachments and seizures, and that such attachments and seizures will give to those creditors who are pursuing them undue and unfair advantage and priority over your complainants, whose claims are not yet due, and make them irreparable injury and damage; that if such litigations be further instituted and its property seized in attachment, as it already has been, there is great danger that the valuable property of the defendant will be irreparably injured and to a great extent destroyed, and your orators say that such seizures and interference with the business and the property of the defendant would wholly destroy the value of the good will of the Company as an asset, and wholly break up its long-established business, and thereby cause detriment and irreparable injury to your orators and all other creditors. And your orators further say that unless this court shall interfere and protect and preserve the property and assets of said defendant by putting it into the hands of a receiver, the said property will be in great danger of destruction and dissipation by the large number of operatives who would necessarily be discharged and left without work or means of obtaining it, and such operatives, by reason of the great distrust they already have, and on account of a fear that they will not in future receive remuneration, will abandon their employment and thereby cause a stoppage of the extensive business of said defendant, to the extent that the creditors of said defendant would not be able to realize one half of the amount upon the several claims that they would if the said business of the defendant were continued."

The appellees, while admitting the general rule to be that creditors must show that they have exhausted legal remedies before coming into a court of equity, insist that the bill disclosed a case in equity on two grounds: first, that upon the insolvency of a corporation its properties become a trust fund for the benefit of its creditors, which can be seized and disposed of by a receiver, and in equitable proceedings; and, second, that the vast interests and properties of this corporation, with their threatened disintegration through several attachment suits, justified the interference of a court of equity to preserve, for the benefit of creditors, that large value which resulted from the unity of the properties. In support of these propositions counsel cite, as especially applicable, Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628 [24: 365]; Union Trust Co. v. Illinois M. R. Co. 117 U. S. 434 [29: 968]; Sage v. Memphis & L. R. Co. 125 U. S. 361 [31: 694]; Mellen v. M. M. Iron Works, 131 U. S. 352 [33: 178]; Barbour v. National Exchange Bank, 45 Ohio St. 133 [10 West. Rep. 458]; Rouse v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 46 Ohio St. 498 [5 L. R. A. 378].

But were it conceded that the bill was defective; that a demurrer must have been sustained; and that the appellant, if it had so chosen to act in the first instance, could have defended its possession, and defeated the action,—still the decree of the circuit court must be sustained. Whatever rights of objection and defense the appellant had, it lost by inaction and acquiescence. Obviously the proceedings had were with its consent. Immediately on filing the bill it entered its appearance; and the same day a receiver was appointed, without objection on its part. It suffered the bills to be taken pro confesso. It permitted the receiver to go on in the possession of these properties for nine months, transacting large business, entering into many contracts and assuming large obligations, without any intimation of a lack of authority, or any objection to the proceedings.

After a lapse of nine months, suddenly its policy changed—it contested where theretofore it had acquiesced. And this, not because of any restored solvency or purpose to resume business, but with the evident intent to prevent the equality among creditors which the existing equitable proceedings would secure, and to give preference to certain creditors. For clearly it was the thought of the president of the corporation, himself the owner of a large majority of its stock, whose management had wrought its financial ruin, that after the setting aside of the equitable proceedings the lien of the confessed judgments would attach, and thus those favored creditors would be preferred.

So the case stands in this attitude. The corporation was insolvent. Its extensive and scattered properties had been brought into single ownership, and so operated together that large benefit resulted in preserving the unity of ownership and operation. Disintegration was threatened through separate attacks, by different creditors, on scattered properties. The preservation of this unity, with its consequent value, and the appropriation of the properties for the benefit of all the creditors equally, were matters deserving large consideration in any proper suit. Certain creditors, acting for all, initiated proceedings looking towards this end. In such proceedings the corporation acquiesced. Substantially all of the creditors came into the proceedings. After months had passed, much business had been transacted and large responsibilities assumed, the corporation, for the benefit of a few creditors and to destroy the equality between all, comes in with the technical objection that the creditors initiating the proceedings should have taken one step more at law before coming into equity. But the maxim, "He who seeks equity must do equity," is as appropriate to the conduct of the defendant as to that of the complainant; and it would be strange if a debtor, to destroy equality and accomplish partiality, could ignore its long acquiescence and plead an unsubstantial technicality to overthrow protracted, extensive and costly proceedings carried on in reliance upon its consent. Surely no such imperfection attends the administration of a court of equity. Good faith and early assertion of rights are as essential on the part of the defendant as of the complainant. This matter has recently been before this court, in Reynes v. Dumont, 180 U. S. 354, 395 [32: 934, 945], and was carefully considered, and the rule, with its limitations, thus stated: "The rule as stated in 1 Daniell's Chancery Practice, 555 (4th Am. ed.), is that, if the objection of want of jurisdiction in equity is not taken in proper time, namely, before the defendant enters into his defense at large, the court, having the general jurisdiction, will exercise it; and in a note on page 550, many cases are cited to establish that 'if a defendant in a suit in equity answers and submits to the jurisdiction of the court, it is too late for him to object that the plaintiff has a plain and adequate remedy at law. This objection should be taken at the earliest opportunity. The above rule must be taken with the qualification that it is competent for the court to grant the relief sought, and that it has jurisdiction of the subject matter.' . . . It was held in Lewis v. Cocks, 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 466 [23: 70], that if the court, upon looking at the proofs, found none at all of the matters which would make a proper case for equity, it would be the duty of the court to recognize the fact and give it effect, though not raised by the pleadings nor suggested by counsel. To the same effect is Oelrichs v. Spain, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 211 [21: 43]. The doctrine of these and similar cases is, that the court, for its own protection, may prevent matters purely cognizable at law from being drawn into chancery at the pleasure of the parties interested; but it by no means follows, where the subject matter belongs to the class over which a court of equity has jurisdiction, and the objection that the complainant has an adequate remedy at law is not made until the hearing in the appellate tribunal, that the latter can exercise no discretion in the disposition of such objection. Under the circumstances of this case, it comes altogether too late, even though, if taken in limine, it might have been worthy of attention." See also Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 180 U. S. 505 [32: 1005]; Union Trust Co. v. Illinois M. R. Co. 117 U. S. 484, 468 [29: 963, 975].

Further comment is unnecessary. The ruling of the Circuit Court was correct, and its decree is therefore affirmed.

THE HOME INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK, Plff. in Err.,

v.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 594-607.)

U. S. bonds not taxable—tax on corporate franchise lawful—privilege of being a corporation—legislative power—mode of fixing amount of tax—limitation of taxing power—capital stock—14th Amendment to U. S. Constitution, effect of.

1. The bonds or obligations of the United States for the payment of money cannot be the subject of taxation by a State; this inhibition upon the States cannot be evaded by any change in the mode or form of the taxation, provided the same result is effected.
2. Where a state statute imposes a tax upon the "corporate franchise or business" of a company, and reference is only made to its capital stock and dividends for the purpose of determining the amount of the tax to be exacted each year, this is not a tax on the capital stock or property of the company, but upon its corporate franchise, and is not therefore subject to the objection that it is a tax on United States securities, although a portion of its capital stock is invested in such securities.
3. By the term "corporate franchise or business," as here used, is meant the right or privilege of being a corporation, that is, of doing business in a corporate capacity.
4. The granting of such right or privilege rests entirely in the discretion of the State, and, when granted may be accompanied with such conditions as its Legislature may judge most befitting to its interests and policy.
5. The validity of the tax can in no way be dependent upon the mode which the State may deem fit to adopt in fixing the amount for any year which it will exact for the franchise. Its action in this matter is not the subject of judicial inquiry in a federal tribunal.
6. The taxation of a corporate franchise has no limitation but the discretion of the taxing power, and its value is not measured like that of property, but may be fixed at any sum that the Legislature may choose.
7. Such tax cannot be affected in any way by the character of the property in which its capital stock is invested.
8. The objection is not tenable that the statute, in imposing such tax, conflicts with the last clause of the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, declaring that no State shall deprive any person within its jurisdiction of the equal protection of the laws, although corporations are persons within the meaning of this Amendment.
9. The Amendment does not prevent the classification of property for taxation, subjecting one kind of property to one rate of taxation, and another kind of property to a different rate, nor distinguishing between franchises, licenses and privileges, and visible and tangible property, and between real and personal property.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of New York to review a judgment in favor of the State against the Home Insurance Company of New York for the payment of a tax. Affirmed.

This cause was argued in this court at the October Term, 1886. The judgment was affirmed by a divided court. 119 U. S. 129 (30: 350). Thereafter a rehearing was granted and the cause restored to the docket. 122 U. S. 636 (30: 1241).

Statement by Mr. Justice Field:

The plaintiff in error, The Home Insurance Company of New York, is a corporation created under the laws of that State. Its capital stock during the year 1881 was three millions of dollars, divided into thirty thousand shares of the par value of one hundred dollars each, all fully paid. In the months of January and July of that year a dividend of $150,000 was declared by the Company, making together ten per cent upon the par value of its capital stock. A portion of that capital stock was invested in bonds of the United States, amounting, when the dividend was declared in July, 1881, and also on the first of November of that year, to $1,940,000.

By an Act of the Legislature of New York passed May 26, 1881 (chap. 361), amending a previous Act providing for the taxation of certain corporations, joint-stock companies and associations, it was declared that every corporation, joint-stock company or association, then or thereafter incorporated under any law of the State, or of any other State or country, and doing business in the State, with certain designated exceptions not material in this case, should be subject to a tax upon "its corporate franchise or business," to be computed as follows:—if its dividend or dividends made or declared during the year ending the first day of November amount to six per cent or more upon the par value of its capital stock, then the tax to be at the rate of one quarter mill upon the capital stock for each one per cent of the dividends. A less rate is provided where there is no dividend, or a dividend less than six per cent, and also where the corporation, company or association has more than one kind of capital stock—as, for instance, common and preferred stock—and upon one of them there is a dividend amounting to six or more per cent, and upon the other there is no dividend or a dividend of less than six per cent. The purpose of the Act is to fix the amount of the tax each year upon the franchise or business of the corporation by the extent of dividends upon its capital stock, or, where there are no dividends, according to the actual value of the capital stock during the year. We are concerned in this case, however, only with the tax where the amount is computed by the extent of the dividends.

The tax payable by the Home Insurance Company, estimated according to its dividends, under the above law of the State, aggregated $7,500. The Company resisted its payment, assuming that the tax was in fact levied upon the capital stock of the Company, and contending that there should be deducted from it a sum bearing the same ratio thereto that the amount invested in bonds of the United States bears to its capital stock, and that the law requiring a tax without such reduction is unconstitutional and void. An agreed case was accordingly made up embodying a statement of the facts, between the Company and the Attorney-General of New York representing the State, and submitted to the Supreme Court of the State. That court gave judgment in favor of the State against the Company, which, on appeal to the Court of Appeals of the State, was affirmed. 92 N. Y. 328. The judgment of the latter court having been remitted to the supreme court and entered there, the case is brought to this court for review on writ of error.

Messrs. B. H. Bristow and David Wilcox, for plaintiff in error:

No tax can be imposed upon that part of defendant's capital invested in United States bonds. A State cannot burden the operations of the national government by taxing its bonds without its consent.

McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 316, 436 (4: 579, 585); Weston v. Charleston, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 449 (7: 481); Banks v. Mayor, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 16 (19: 57); People v. Comrs. of Taxes, 90 N. Y. 63.

A tax upon the capital of a corporation is a tax upon the property in which the capital is invested. No part of the capital invested in United States bonds, therefore, is taxable.

Bank of Commerce v. New York, 67 U. S. 2 Black, 620 (17: 451); Bank Tax Case, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 200 (17: 798).

Whether or not this is a tax upon capital is to be determined, not by the form of the Statute, but by its effect. When the Statute was first enacted the Legislature merely imposed the tax. The following year it inserted the definition thereof "as a tax upon corporate franchise or business." But if the tax is, in its nature and effect, a tax upon capital, it is none the less so because of this amendment declaring it to be a tax upon franchise or business.

In Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 419 (6: 678), a State Statute required all importers of foreign goods to take out a license and pay a fee. The court held that this was a regulation of commerce.

The same thing was ruled in Ward v. Maryland, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 418 (20: 449); Welton v. State, 91 U. S. 275 (23: 347); Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344 (26: 565); Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446 (29: 691); Leloup v. Mobile, 127 U. S. 640 (32: 311); Smith v. Turner, 48 U. S. 7 How. 283 (12: 702); Henderson v. Mayor, 92 U. S. 259 (23: 543); Cook v. Penn. 97 U. S. 566 (24: 1015), and Parkersburg & O. R. Transp. Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 691 (27: 534).

The intent of the law is not material.

Almy v. California, 65 U. S. 24 How. 169 (16: 644); Bank Tax Case, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 200 (17: 798); Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 277, 325 (18: 356, 363); Grandall v. Nevada, 73 U. Co. v. Texas*, 105 U. S. 460 (26: 1067); Moran v. New Orleans, 112 U. S. 69 (28: 653); Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, 337 (29: 414, 419); Pickard v. Pullman Co. 117

U. S. 84 (29: 785); Robbins v. Shelby Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 496 (30: 694, 697); Fargo v. Michigan, 121 U. S. 230, 244 (30: 888, 894); Bouman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465 (31: 700); Pullman Southern Car Co. v. Nolan, 22 Fed. Rep. 276, 281; People v. Allen, 42 N. Y. 404, 418; Re Deansville Cemetery Asso. 66 N. Y. 569; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98.

The declaration by the Legislature that this is a tax on franchise or business is not controlling. The name of this imposition is immaterial: it is the substance we are to consider.

Imman Co. v. Tynker, 94 U. S. 288 (24: 118).

The franchises of a corporation may be taxed by imposing a fixed sum, or a graduated contribution proportioned either to the value of the privileges granted, or to the extent of their exercise, or to the results of such exercise.

State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 284 (21: 164); Delaware Railroad Tax, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 206, 231 (21: 888, 896).

These provisions of the Act do not impose a fixed sum. Nor do they impose a contribution proportioned to the extent of the exercise of the franchise to the amount of business done.

The franchise is the right to use the tangible property in a special manner for purposes of gain.

State Railway Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575 (28: 668).

It is itself a part of the property of the corporation, but quite distinct and separate from its tangible property.

Gordon v. App. Tax Court, 44 U. S. 8 How. 138, 150 (11: 529, 535); Wilmington R. Co. v. Reid, 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 264, 265 (30: 568).

It is a thing capable of appraisal and ascertainable by evidence, and is frequently made the subject of taxation by the sovereign power. It is a right separate and distinct from the capital and moneyed assets of a corporation, and as to the value of which they furnish no evidence.

Conaughty v. Saratoga Bank, 92 N. Y. 401; Veazie Bank v. Fanno, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 533, 547 (19: 482, 487); Monroe Savings Bank v. Rochester, 37 N. Y. 365, 367; Porter v. Rockford R. Co. 76 Ill. 561, 578.

Its value is determined by subtracting from the total actual value of the capital stock the total value of all items of property other than the franchise. The remainder is the value of the franchise—the value of the right to use the tangible property in a special manner for the purposes of gain.

State Railway Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575, 602-607 (28: 668, 669, 671); Spring Valley Works v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 69, 117; Burke v. Badlam, 57 Cal. 594; San José Co. v. January, 57 Cal. 614.

Here neither the value of this part of the property of the corporation nor the results of its use are in any way ascertained.

The tax is a percentage upon that part of defendant's income which it has distributed in dividends. This is a tax upon the property from which the income arises.

As this tax includes property not taxable, it cannot be sustained as a tax on the franchise.

Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 118 U. S. 394 (30: 118); California v. Central Pac. R. Co. 127 U. S. 1 (32: 150).

The cases relied upon by the State, to wit: Society for Savings v. Coite, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 594 (18: 897); Provident Inst. v. Mass. 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 611 (18: 907); and Hamilton Co. v. Mass. 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 632 (18: 904),—have no present application.

They are controlled by Philadelphia & Southern Steamship Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326 (30: 1200).

In that case, a state statute imposed a tax upon the gross receipts of a steamship company of the State, which were derived from the transportation of persons and property by sea between different States and to and from foreign countries. It was held that the tax was imposed not upon the franchise but upon the commerce itself from which the receipts arose, and was therefore unconstitutional.

Fargo v. Mich. 121 U. S. 230 (30: 888); Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640 (32: 811).

Where a tax is upon the property in which the capital is invested, corporations upon which it is imposed are entitled to deduct their United States bonds from the amount of the assessment.

Bank of Commerce v. N. Y. 67 U. S. 2 Black, 620 (17: 451); Bank Tax Case, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 200 (17: 793).

In matters of taxation, it is a sacred duty to impose the burdens equally.

Equality of taxation is a fundamental principle of our government, which no Legislature, in the absence of the most explicit provisions, will be presumed to have intended to violate.

People v. Suprs. 20 Barb. 81, 88, affirmed 16 N. Y. 424.

The tax is a percentage upon the capital—upon the dividends which it has earned. The rate of tax increases or diminishes with the rate of dividend.

The provisions of this Act were copied literally from a Statute of Pennsylvania (Laws of 1879, p. 114, sec. 4), and have long existed there in the same substantial form.

Laws of 1844, p. 498, sec. 33; Laws of 1859, p. 529; Laws of 1868, p. 109, sec. 4.

It is well settled there that they impose a tax upon the property of the corporation (Westchester Co. v. Chester Co. 30 Pa. 232; *Lackawanna Iron & Coal Co. v. Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

The contention of the plaintiff in error is that the tax in question was levied upon its capital stock, and therefore invalid so far as the bonds of the United States constitute a part of that stock. If that contention were well founded there would be no question as to the invalidity of the tax. That the bonds or obligations of the United States for the payment of money cannot be the subject of taxation by a State is familiar law settled by numerous adjudications of this court. It is a tax upon the exercise of the power of Congress to borrow money; a tax which, if permitted, could be limited in amount only by the discretion of the State, and might therefore be carried to an extent impairing, if not destructive of, the efficiency of the power, to the serious detriment of the general government. As held in McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 436 [4: 608], the States have no power by taxation to impede, burden or in any manner control the operation of the Constitution and laws enacted by Congress to carry into execution the powers vested in the general government, a doctrine which, applied in Weston v. Charleston, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 449 [7: 481], annulled a tax levied by the authority of a law of South Carolina on stock issued for loans to the United States.

Nor can this inhibition upon the States be evaded by any change in the mode or form of the taxation provided the same result is effected—that is, an impediment is thereby interposed to the exercise of a power of the United States. That which cannot be accomplished directly cannot be accomplished indirectly. Through all such attempts the court will look to the end sought to be reached, and if that would trench upon a power of the government, the law creating it will be set aside or its enforcement restrained. Thus in Henderson v. New York City, 92 U. S. 259, 268 [23: 548], a Statute of New York provided that the master or owner of any vessel bringing passengers from foreign ports into the Port of New York should give a bond in the sum of $300 for each passenger landed, against his becoming a public charge for four years thereafter, or pay within twenty-four hours thereafter $150 for each passenger, and that, if neither bond was given nor payment made, a penalty of $500 for such failure would be incurred, which should be a lien upon the vessel. It was contended that the object of the requirement was not taxation but protection against pauperism, and therefore valid as within the police power. But the court said that in whatever language the statute may be framed its purpose must be determined by its reasonable and natural effect, and judged by that criterion the tax was either on the owners of the vessel for the right of landing passengers or upon the passengers themselves; and that therefore the Statute was a regulation of commerce and void.

To the same purport is the familiar case of Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 419 [6: 678], so often cited in this court, where it was contended that a license tax required of an importer to sell his goods while held in bulk as imported was a tax only upon his occupation. But the court observed that this was only changing the form without varying the substance of the tax, adding that "it is treating a prohibition which is general as if it were confined to a particular mode of doing the forbidden thing. All must perceive that a tax on the sale of an article imported only for sale is a tax on the article itself."

Looking now at the tax in this case upon the plaintiff in error, we are unable to perceive that it falls within the doctrines of any of the cases cited, to which we fully assent, not doubting their correctness in any particular. It is not a tax in terms upon the capital stock of the Company, nor upon any bonds of the United States composing a part of that stock. The Statute designates it a tax upon the "corporate franchise or business" of the Company, and reference is only made to its capital stock and dividends for the purpose of determining the amount of the tax to be exacted each year.

By the term "corporate franchise or business," as here used, we understand is meant (not referring to corporations sole, which are not usually created for commercial business) the right or privilege given by the State to two or more persons of being a corporation, that is, of doing business in a corporate capacity, and not the privilege or franchise which, when incorporated, the company may exercise. The right or privilege to be a corporation, or to do business as such body, is one generally deemed of value to the corporators, or it would not be sought in such numbers as at present. It is a right or privilege by which several individuals may unite themselves under a common name and act as a single person, with a succession of members, without dissolution or suspension of business and with a limited individual liability. The granting of such right or privilege rests entirely in the discretion of the State, and, of course, when granted, may be accompanied with such conditions as its Legislature may judge most befitting to its interests and policy. It may require, as a condition of the grant of the franchise, and also of its continued exercise, that the corporation pay a specific sum to the State each year, or month, or a specific portion of its gross receipts, or of the profits of its business, or a sum to be ascertained in any convenient mode which it may prescribe. The validity of the tax can in no way be dependent upon the mode which the State may deem fit to adopt in fixing the amount for any year which it will exact for the franchise. No constitutional objection lies in the way of a legislative body prescribing any mode of measurement to determine the amount it will charge for the privileges it bestows. It may well seek in this way to increase its revenue to the extent to which it has been cut off by exemption of other property from taxation. As its revenues to meet its expenses are lessened in one direction, it may look to any other property as sources of revenue, which is not exempted from taxation.

Its action in this matter is not the subject of judicial inquiry in a federal tribunal. As was said in Delaware Railroad Tax Case, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 206, 231 [21: 888, 896]: "The State may impose taxes upon the corporation as an entity existing under its laws, as well as upon the capital stock of the corporation or its separate corporate property. And the manner in which its value shall be assessed and the rate of taxation, however arbitrary or capricious, are mere matters of legislative discretion. It is not for us to suggest in any case that a more equitable mode of assessment or rate of taxation might be adopted than the one prescribed by the Legislature of the State; our only concern is with the validity of the tax; all else lies beyond the domain of our jurisdiction." It is true, as said by this court in California v. Pacific R. Co., 127 U. S. 41 [32:157], that the taxation of a corporate franchise has no limitation but the discretion of the taxing power, and its value is not measured like that of property, but may be fixed at any sum that the Legislature may choose; it may be arbitrarily laid, without any valuation put upon the franchise. If any hardship or oppression is created by the amount exacted, the remedy must be sought by appeal to the Legislature of the State; it cannot be furnished by the federal tribunals.

The tax in the present case would not be affected if the nature of the property in which the whole capital stock is invested were changed and put into real property or bonds of New York, or of other States. From the very nature of the tax, being laid upon a franchise given by the State, and revocable at pleasure, it cannot be affected in any way by the character of the property in which its capital stock is invested. The power of the State over the corporate franchise, and the conditions upon which it shall be exercised, is as ample and plenary in the one case as in the other.

In some States the franchise and privileges of a corporation are declared to be personal property. Such was the case in New York with reference to the privileges and franchises of savings banks. They were so declared by a law passed in 1866, and made liable to taxation to an amount not exceeding the gross sum of the surplus earned and in the possession of the banks. The law was sustained by the Court of Appeals of the State in Monroe Sav. Bank v. Rochester, 37 N. Y. 365, 367, although the bank had a portion of its property invested in United States bonds. In its opinion the court observed that in declaring the privileges and franchises of a bank to be personal property the Legislature adopted no novel principle of taxation; that the powers and privileges which constitute the franchises of a corporation were in a just sense property, quite distinct and separate from the property which, by the use of such franchises, the corporation might acquire; that they might be subjected to taxation if the Legislature saw fit so to enact; that such taxation being within the power of the Legislature, it might prescribe a rule or test of their value; that all franchises were not of equal value, their value depending, in some instances, upon the nature of the business authorized, and the extent to which permission was given to multiply capital for its prosecution; and that the tax being upon the franchises and privileges, it was unimportant in what manner the property of the corporation was invested. And the court added: "It is true that where a state tax is laid upon the property of an individual or corporation, so much of their property as is invested in United States bonds is to be treated, for the purposes of assessment, as if it did not exist. But this rule can have no application to an assessment upon a franchise, where a reference to the property is made only to ascertain the value of the thing assessed." And again: "It must be regarded as a sound doctrine that the State, in granting a franchise to a corporation, may limit the powers to be exercised under it and annex conditions to its enjoyment, and make it contribute to the revenues of the State. If the grantee accepts the boon it must bear the burden."

This doctrine of the taxability of the franchises of a corporation without reference to the character of the property in which its capital stock or its deposits are invested is sustained by the judgments in Society for Savings v. Coit and Provident Institution v. Massachusetts, which were before this court at the December Term, 1867. 78 U. S. 6 Wall. 594, 611 [18:897, 907]. In the first of these cases it appeared that a law of Connecticut of 1863 provided that savings banks in that State should make an annual return to the controller of public accounts "of the total amounts of all deposits in them, respectively, on the first day of July in each successive year," and should pay to the treasurer of the State a sum equal to three fourths of one per cent on the total amount of deposits in such banks on those days, and that the tax should be in lieu of all other taxes upon the banks or their deposits. On the 1st day of July, 1863, the Society for Savings, one of the banks, had invested over $500,000 of its deposits in securities of the United States, which were declared by Congress to be exempted from taxation by state authority, whether held by individuals, corporations or associations. (12 Stat. 348.) Upon the amount of its deposits thus invested, the society refused to pay the sum equal to the prescribed percentage. In a suit brought by the treasurer of the State to recover the tax, the payment of which was thus refused, the Supreme Court of Connecticut held that the tax was not on property but on the corporation as such. The case being brought here, the judgment was affirmed, this court holding that the tax was on the franchise of the corporation and not upon its property, and the fact that a part of the deposits was invested in securities of the United States did not exempt the society from the tax. Said the court: "Nothing can be more certain in legal decision than that the privileges and franchises of a private corporation, and all trades and avocations by which the citizens acquire a livelihood, may be taxed by a State for the support of the state government. Authority to that effect resides in the State independent of the federal government, and is wholly unaffected by the fact that the corporation or individual has or has not made investment in federal securities."

It was contended in that case that the deposits in the bank were subjected to taxation from the fact that the extent of the tax was determined by their amount. But the court said: "Reference is evidently made to the total amount of deposits on the day named, not as the subject matter for assessment, but as the basis for computing the tax required to be paid by the corporation defendants. They enjoy important privileges, and it is just that they should contribute to the public burdens. The views of the defendants are, that the sums required to be paid to the treasury of the State is a tax on the assets of the institution, but there is not a word in the provision which gives any satisfactory support to that proposition. Different modes of taxation are adopted in different States, and even in the same State at different periods of their history. Fixed sums are in some instances required to be annually paid into the treasury of the State, and in others a prescribed percentage is levied on the stock, assets or property owned or held by the corporation, while in others the sum required to be paid is left indefinite, to be ascertained in some mode by the amount of business which the corporation shall transact within a defined period. Experience shows that the latter mode is better calculated to effect justice among the corporations required to contribute to the public burdens than any other which has been devised, as its tendency is to graduate the required contribution to the value of the privileges granted and to the extent of their exercise. Existence of the power is beyond doubt, and it rests in the discretion of the Legislature whether they will levy a fixed sum, or if not, to determine in what manner the amount shall be ascertained." p. 608 [908].

In the second case mentioned, Provident Institution v. Massachusetts, it appeared that the Statute of Massachusetts, passed in 1862, levying taxes on certain insurance companies and depositors in savings banks, provided that every institution for savings incorporated under its laws should pay to the Commonwealth a tax of one half of one per cent per annum on the amount of its deposits, to be assessed one half of said annual tax on the average amount of its deposits for the six months preceding the 1st day of May, and the other half on the average amount of its deposits for the six months preceding the 1st day of November.

The Provident Institution for Savings in that State was authorized to invest its deposits in securities of the United States. Its average amount of deposits for the six months preceding the 1st day of May, 1865, was over eight millions, of which over one million was invested in such securities. It paid all the taxes demanded except on the portion which was thus invested. Upon that it declined to pay the tax. In a suit brought by the Commonwealth to recover the same, the Supreme Judicial Court of the State held that the tax was one on the franchise of the company and not on property, and therefore gave judgment for the Commonwealth. The case being brought here, the judgment was affirmed. In deciding the case, this court said, referring to a section of the Statute under which the tax was levied: "Deposits, as the word is employed in that section, are the sums received by the institution from depositors, without regard to the nature of the funds. They are not capital stock in any sense, nor are they even investments, as the word is there used, which simply means the sums received wholly irrespective of the disposition made of the same, or their market value." And speaking of the difference existing between taxes upon franchises and taxes upon property it said: "Franchise taxes are levied directly by an Act of the Legislature; and the corporations are required to pay the amount into the state treasury. They differ from property taxes as levied for state and municipal purpose in the basis prescribed for computing the amount, in the manner of assessment and in the mode of collection;" and again, "Comparative valuation in assessing property taxes is the basis of computation in ascertaining the amount to be contributed by an individual, but the amount of a franchise tax depends upon the business transacted by the corporation and the extent to which they have exercised the privileges granted in their charter." pp. 681, 682 [913].

The court also referred to a decision made by the Supreme Court of the State to the effect that the assessment imposed was to be regarded as an excise or duty on the privilege or franchise of the corporation, not as a tax on the moneys in its hands belonging to the depositors. It was the corporation, it said, that was to make the payment, and if it failed to do so it was liable not only to an action for the amount of the tax, but might also be enjoined from the future exercise of its franchise until all taxes should be fully paid. Com. v. People's F. C. Sav. Bank, 5 Allen, 481.

And the court held that the valuation of the property had nothing to do with determining the amount of the tax, but that the amount depended on the average amount of deposits for the six months preceding the respective days named, and that there was no necessary relation between the average amount of the deposits and the amount of property owned by the institution, and not being a property tax it was to be considered as a franchise tax laid upon the corporation for the privileges conferred by its charter, which by all the authorities it was competent for the State to tax irrespective of what disposition the institution had made of its funds, or in what manner they had been invested.

In Hamilton Mfg. Co. v. Massachusetts, 78 U. S. 6 Wall. 632 [18: 904], a Statute of Massachusetts which required corporations having a capital stock divided into shares, to pay a tax of a certain percentage upon the excess of the market value of such stock over the value of its real estate and machinery, was sustained as a statute imposing a franchise tax, notwithstanding a portion of the property which went to make the excess of the market value consisted of securities of the United States, this court, however, placing its decision upon the fact that under the provisions of the State Constitution and the practice under it the tax had been so considered by the highest tribunal of the State. This decision goes much further than is necessary to sustain the judgment of the Court of Appeals of New York in the present case.

In this case we hold, as well upon general principles as upon the authority of the first two cases cited from 6 Wallace, that the tax for which the suit is brought is not a tax on the capital stock or property of the Company, but upon its corporate franchise, and is not therefore subject to the objection stated by counsel, because a portion of its capital stock is invested in securities of the United States.

Nor is the objection tenable that the Statute, in imposing such tax, conflicts with the last clause of the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, declaring that no State shall deprive any person within its jurisdiction of the equal protection of the laws. It is conceded that corporations are persons within the meaning of this Amendment. It has been so decided by this court. Pembina Con. Silver Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181 [81: 650]. But the Amendment does not prevent the classification of property for taxation—subjecting one kind of property to one rate of taxation, and another kind of property to a different rate—distinguishing between franchises, licenses and privileges, and visible and tangible property, and between real and personal property. Nor does the Amendment prohibit special legislation. Indeed, the greater part of all legislation is special, either in the extent to which it operates, or the objects sought to be obtained by it. And when such legislation applies to artificial bodies, it is not open to objection if all such bodies are treated alike under similar circumstances and conditions, in respect to the privileges conferred upon them and the liabilities to which they are subjected. Under the Statute of New York all corporations, joint-stock companies and associations of the same kind are subjected to the same tax. There is the same rule applicable to all under the same conditions in determining the rate of taxation. There is no discrimination in favor of one against another of the same class. See Barbier v. Conolly, 118 U. S. 82 [28: 925]; Soon Hing v. Crowley, Id. 709 [1147]; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Hume, 115 U. S. 523 [29: 466]; Missouri R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 209 [32: 109]; Minneapolis R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 82 [32: 588].

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice Miller:

Mr. Justice Harlan and myself dissent from the judgment in this case, because we think that, notwithstanding the peculiar language of the Statute of New York, the tax in controversy is in effect a tax upon bonds of the United States held by the Insurance Company.

Tennessee Statute as to granting new trials, constitutional—construction of the Statute—errors of law—insufficiency of evidence—power of court—application of Statute—new trial after two verdicts—construction of judgment.

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction in the United States Supreme Court, where federal question arises, or where are drawn in question statutes, treaty or Constitution, see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4: 97; Matthews v. Zane, 2: 654; Williams v. Norris 6: 571.

1. The Statute of Tennessee forbidding the granting of more than two new trials in the same cause on the facts is not in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.
2. By the decisions of Tennessee, the Statute was intended to limit the power of the courts over the findings of fact by the jury upon regular proceedings and a correct charge.
3. It does not prevent the granting of new trials for errors committed by the court, or for improper conduct which may vitiate the verdict.
4. It applies to a case where, in the opinion of the judge, the verdict should have been otherwise than as rendered, because of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain it, but not to a case where there is no evidence at all.
5. The truth of the facts and circumstances offered in evidence must be determined by the jury. But it is for the court to decide whether or not those facts and circumstances, if found by the jury to be true, are sufficient in point of law to maintain the allegations in the pleadings.
6. Whenever the Statute is applied, it must be upon the assumption that although the court would have found a different verdict, because of the weakness of the evidence, yet there was some evidence tending to establish the cause of action.
7. Courts rarely grant a new trial after two verdicts upon the facts in favor of the same party, except for error of law, and the Statute, in the interest of the termination of litigation, makes that imperative which would otherwise be discretionary.
8. The statement in the judgment of affirmance in this case, that "the court adjudges that there is no evidence to support the verdict of the jury," indicates simply the opinion of the court that the jury ought not to have found the verdict that they did, and that the judgment of the court below, refusing to grant a new trial upon the facts, would have been reversed but for the existence of the Statute, which made it error to award it, [No. 1182.]

Submitted March 24, 1890. Decided April 7, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court of Haywood County in that State, in favor of plaintiff, for damages for injuries sustained by him through the negligence of the defendant, the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company. On motion to dismiss united with a motion to affirm. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. A. Freeman, for defendant in error, in support of motion.

Mr. Ed. Baxter, for plaintiff in error, in opposition.

Mr. W. M. Baxter, counsel in a similar case, filed a brief in opposition to motions, by leave of the court.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Woodson sued the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company to recover damages for injuries sustained by him through its negligence. The defendant plead not guilty. Upon the trial in the Circuit Court of Haywood County, Tennessee, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, assessing his damages at $3,000, which on motion was set aside, and a new trial granted upon the ground that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence. A second trial was then had, which resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff of $5,000, which was again set aside on motion, upon the same ground. A third trial was then had resulting in a verdict of $3,000, upon which judgment was entered. And the record then states: "In this cause, on this the 31st day of August, 1888, the defendant moved the court to grant it a new trial herein and to arrest the judgment herein because the verdict of the jury, returned herein August 30, 1888, was not supported by the law and the evidence submitted, and because of error in his honor the trial judge in allowing plaintiff to make proof of others than the plaintiff swinging on to trains at other times prior to the day of the accident, and of the habit of plaintiff and other boys in swinging to moving trains prior to the day of the accident; which motions are by the court seen and understood, and the same are by the court overruled and disallowed. Thereupon the defendant presented its bill of exceptions to the ruling of the court in overruling its motions aforesaid and in overruling its objection to the admission of the testimony aforesaid in the progress of the trial; which bill of exceptions is signed by the court and ordered to be made a part of the record herein." Defendant prayed an appeal to the Supreme Court of Tennessee, which was granted, and an appeal bond given accordingly.

The bill of exceptions sets forth all the evidence adduced upon the trial, and the charge of the court in full. This charge is of considerable length, and presented the case to the jury with apparent care. It is nowhere therein stated that there was no evidence upon which the plaintiff would be entitled to recover; on the contrary, it assumes that there was some evidence which would justify a verdict for the plaintiff.

It was said by the trial judge, among other things: "On the other hand, if you find the injury was the direct and proximate result of the defendant's negligence or misconduct, you will return your verdict for the plaintiff; or if you find the plaintiff was a child of tender years when injured, and that his conduct and wrong did not contribute to the injury, but that he was not possessed of such discretion and judgment on account of his infancy as would reasonably be calculated to cause him to avoid such danger, and you further find that the defendant might have prevented and avoided the accident by the exercise of ordinary and reasonable prudence and caution, then in that event you should return your verdict for the plaintiff. The plaintiff would be a trespasser if he was on the defendant's freight trains or swinging to one of them, or in the defendant's yard or on its grounds trying to seize on to one of its cars. He would have no right to complain of a clearance post or staub being located on the defendant's track or road-bed if he was such trespasser, and defendant had put up or caused to be put up such clearance staub in its regular business.

road through Brownsville, Tennessee, and that plaintiff, in December, 1881, was a small boy, about six years old, and that he and other small boys had been, prior to that date, for a long while in the habit daily of jumping on and off of the freight and passenger trains of defendant while they were in motion and riding thereon in and about the yards of defendant in said city, and that the conductors, brakemen and trainmen and agent of defendant at its depot in Brownsville had knowledge of such practices and habit of the plaintiff and other boys, and that the said conductors, agents or brakemen, or other employes of the defendant, willingly permitted and encouraged the plaintiff to so ride on and jump on and off of such moving trains, and that the agent or assistant agent of defendant and the conductor of the freight train by which plaintiff was hurt knew that plaintiff was at the depot or in the yards of defendant or near the train, ready and likely to try to jump on said train when it might be put in motion, and that said train was so put in motion and moved off, and that plaintiff was hurt by being thrown under the wheels thereof while swinging to one of the freight cars or while running along by one of said cars endeavoring to swing on the same, and that no effort or precaution was taken by said conductor or said assistant agent of defendant possessing such knowledge as aforesaid, then in that event I charge you the plaintiff would be entitled to a verdict for some damages against the defendant, and if you find such to be the facts you should return a verdict for the plaintiff."

It is stated that the bill of exceptions is to the judgment of the court in overruling the objections to the admission of testimony, and also in overruling the motion for new trial and in arrest of judgment. It does not appear that the court was asked to instruct the jury, as matter of law, that no recovery could be had upon any view which could be properly taken of the facts the evidence tended to establish; and it is evident from the extracts above given from the charge of the court that the trial judge must have been of opinion that a verdict for the plaintiff could be sustained upon some view that might be properly taken.

The Railroad Company assigned thirteen errors in the Supreme Court of the State as grounds for the reversal of the judgment of the circuit court. Nearly all of these questioned the rulings of the court in relation to the admission of testimony and in different parts of the charge. The first error assigned was in permitting, under the pleadings, the plaintiff below to make proof of boys besides himself, "at other times prior to the one when plaintiff below was injured, swinging to trains of defendant below other than the freight train which ran over and injured him." The second error was as follows: "Because the proof introduced in accordance with the pleadings wholly fails to show that defendant below was guilty of any negligence whatever in running its freight train as alleged, at the time and place alleged, over the plaintiff below, but, on the contrary, shows that plaintiff's injury was the result of his own gross negligence." This second error therefore rested on essentially the same ground as the first, in that it claimed there was a failure of proof, if the evidence were confined to that contended to be alone admissible under the pleadings. The thirteenth error reads thus: "Because, from the uncontroverted facts in the record, the verdict should have been for defendant."

The assignment nowhere specifically alleged that the circuit court erred as matter of law, in the entry of judgment, because there was no evidence to go to the jury, nor is there any allusion to the Statute hereafter referred to.

The Supreme Court of Tennessee affirmed the judgment in these words: "This cause was heard upon the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of Haywood County, and the court adjudges that there is no evidence to support the verdict of the jury, but the defendant having obtained three verdicts of separate juries upon different trials, two of which have been heretofore set aside by the circuit judge, and now alone upon this ground, the Statute of Tennessee forbidding the granting of more than two new trials in the same cause on the facts, which Statute is not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments, it is considered by this court that said judgment be affirmed, and that defendant in error, Eddie Woodson, by W. H. Lea, as next friend, recover of the plaintiff in error, The Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, the sum of three thousand dollars ($3,000), amount of judgment of court below, and the costs of said court," etc.

A writ of error was sued out from this court upon the ground that the validity of a Statute of the State of Tennessee was drawn in question, as being repugnant to the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and that the decision was in favor of its validity. A motion is now made to dismiss the writ of error and with it is united a motion to affirm the judgment.

In each of the Constitutions of the State of Tennessee of 1796, 1834 and 1870, it is declared that "the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate," and also that "judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law." Const. 1796, art. 1, sec. 6, art 5, sec. 5; 1834, art. 1, sec. 6, art. 6, sec. 9; 1870, art 1, sec. 6, art. 6, sec. 9. The purpose of this latter provision was stated in Ivey v. Hodges, 4 Humph. 155, to be to put a stop to the practice in summing up, of "telling the jury not what was deposed to, but what was proved."

In Claxton v. State, 2 Humph. 181, it was held that where the court charged the jury that if they should find a special verdict which presented the testimony of one of the witnesses as the facts of the case, he should declare it a case of manslaughter, "this charge announced a conclusion of law upon a hypothetical state of facts, and did not trench upon the constitutional rights of the defendant."

And so in Williams v. Norwood, 2 Yerg. 329, the court decided that "a party has a right to the opinion of the court, distinctly as to the law, whether certain facts constitute probable cause or not, if the jury believe the facts as stated were proved."

Since 1801 there has been upon the statute book of the State of Tennessee the following provision: "Not more than two new trials shall be granted to the same party in any action at law, or upon the trial by jury of an issue of fact in equity." Acts 1801, chap. 6, sec. 59; Laws Tenn. 1881, p. 229; Code 1858, sec. 3122, p. 590; Code Tennessee 1884, sec. 3835, p. 735.

In Trott v. West, 10 Yerg. 499, 500 (1837), the Supreme Court of Tennessee says that this Statute "means that where the facts of the case have been fairly left to the jury upon a proper charge of the court, and they have twice found a verdict for the same party, each of which having been set aside by the court, if the same party obtain another verdict in like manner, it shall not be disturbed. But this Act did not intend to prevent the court granting new trials for error in the charge of the court to the jury, for error in the admission of, or rejection of testimony, for misconduct of the jury, and the like." Turner v. Ross, 1 Humph. 16 (1839); East Tennessee & G. R. Co. v. Hackney, 1 Head, 170 (1858).

In Knorrville Iron Co. v. Dobson, 15 Lea, 409, 416 (1885), it is said that "this court has uniformly held that the Statute was intended to limit the power of the courts over the findings of fact by the jury upon regular proceedings and a correct charge. If the court in the same case has set aside, upon the motion of the same party, the verdicts of two juries, upon the ground that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain them, the power of the court is at an end to grant another new trial to the same party upon the facts or merits. The Statute does not prevent the granting of new trials for errors committed by the court, or for improper conduct which may vitiate the verdict." Wilson v. Greer, 7 Humph. 518.

In Tate v. Gray, 4 Sneed, 594, it was held that it is the duty of the circuit judge "to grant a new trial in all cases where he believes the preponderance of the proof is decidedly against the finding;" and that "although by the theory of our system the jury are the proper and exclusive triers of the facts, yet the law requires the circuit judge, who is presumed to have more practice and skill in the investigation of truth, to set aside their verdicts, whenever in his opinion they have disregarded or misconceived the force of proof, that a new trial may be had."

From these decisions it is clear that in Tennessee, as elsewhere, although the jury are the judges of the facts, yet the judge has power to set aside the verdict when, in his judgment, it is against the weight of the evidence, but that that supervisory power cannot be exercised under the Statute when the triers of the facts have three times determined them the same way. This manifestly refers to a state of case where, in the opinion of the judge, the verdict should have been otherwise than as rendered, because of the insufficiency of the evidence to sus-tain it, but not to a case where there is no evidence at all. It is the settled law of this court that "when the evidence given at the trial, with all inferences that the jury could justifiably draw from it, is insufficient to support a verdict for the plaintiff, so that such a verdict, if returned, must be set aside, the court is not bound to submit the case to the jury, but may direct a verdict for the defendant" (Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 109 U. S. 478, 482 [27: 1008, 1005]; Gunther v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co., 134 U. S. 110 [38: 857]); while, on the other hand, the case should be left to the jury, unless the conclusion follows, as matter of law, that no recovery can be had upon any view which can be properly taken of the facts the evidence tends to establish. Dunkley v. North-eastern R. Co., 130 U. S. 649, 652 [32: 1058, 1059]. In such case the practice of a demurrer to the evidence can be resorted to, or a motion to exclude the evidence from the jury, or to instruct them that the plaintiff cannot recover, which motions are in the nature of demurrers to evidence, though less technical, and have in many of the States superseded the ancient practice of a demurrer to evidence. Parks v. Ross, 52 U. S. 11 How. 362 [13: 730]; Schuchardt v. Allens, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 359 [17: 642]. Such a motion, like the demurrer to evidence, admits not only what the testimony proves but what it tends to prove. The ultimate facts, in other words, are admitted. In Bacon v. Parker, 2 Overton (Tenn.), 57, it was decided that an involuntary nonsuit could not be ordered, but a demurrer to evidence was allowed in Bedford v. Ingram, 5 Haywood (Tenn.), 155; and it must be that as the duty devolves upon the judge "to declare the law," he may be requested, in some form, to advise the jury that the plaintiff cannot recover when that is the conclusion of law arising upon the record, and should do so though not specifically directed. It is true that it was held in Kirtland v. Montgomery, 1 Swan, 452, that it was error for the trial judge to assume to answer both the questions of law and the questions of fact involved in that case, which was one, however, in which there was evidence raising questions of fact to be determined; and in Ayres v. Moulton, 5 Coldw. 154, it was held error in the circuit judge to charge the jury that from the facts as proven the plaintiffs were "entitled to recover of the defendant, the sum sued for," because "the facts to be deduced from the evidence must be left exclusively to the jury." But that also was a case where it evidently did not follow from the ultimate facts that the plaintiffs were entitled as matter of law to recover as stated. To the same effect is Cuse v. Williams, 2 Coldw. 239, where it was ruled that if the charge of the trial judge "be equivalent to a determination of the facts involved, a new trial will be granted." This is and must be so, whenever there are deductions of fact to be drawn by the jury, but where that is not the case, although a direct instruction to return a verdict for the defendant may not be in accordance with the practice in Tennessee, yet the decisions show that the question whether a recovery can be had at all or not can be presented in some appropriate form in that State.

Thus, in Whirley v. Whiteman,¹ Head, 616, it is said: "In trials by jury, the court is to decide the questions of law, and the jury questions of fact; what are called mixed questions, consisting of both law and fact, as questions in respect to the degree of care, skill, diligence, etc., required by law in particular cases, are to be submitted to the jury, under proper instructions from the court, as to the rules and principles of law by which they are to be governed in their determination of the case. The truth of the facts and circumstances offered in evidence, in support of the allegations on the record, must be determined by the jury. But it is for the court to decide whether or not those facts and circumstances, if found by the jury to be true, are sufficient in point of law to maintain the allegations in the pleadings. And this must be done in one of two modes: either the court must inform the jury hypothetically whether or not the facts which the evidence tends to prove, will, if established in the opinion of the jury, satisfy the allegations, or the jury must find the facts specially, and then the court will apply the law and pronounce whether or not the facts so found are sufficient to support the averments of the parties. 1 Stark. on Ev. 447. The principle of law by which the jury must be governed in finding a verdict cannot be left to their arbitrary determination. The rights of parties must be decided according to the established law of the land, as declared by the Legislature or expounded by the courts, and not according to what the jury in their own opinion may suppose the law is or ought to be; otherwise the law would be as fluctuating and uncertain as the diverse views and opinions of different juries in regard to it." Memphis Gayoso Gas Co. v. Williamson, 9 Heisk. 314, 341; Gregory v. Underhill, 6 Lea, 211.

Tested by this rule, whenever the Statute is applied, it must be upon the assumption that although the court would have found a different verdict, because of the weakness of the evidence, yet there was some evidence tending to establish the cause of action. Courts rarely grant a new trial after two verdicts upon the facts in favor of the same party, except for error of law, and the Statute, in the interest of the termination of litigation, makes that imperative which would otherwise be discretionary. For decisions under similar statutory provisions see Silabe v. Lucas, 58 Ill. 479; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Patterson, 93 Ill. 290; Carmichael v. Geary, 27 Ind. 362; Boyce v. Smith, 16 Mo. 817; Wildy v. Bonney, 35 Miss. 77; Rains v. Hood, 23 Tex. 555; Watterson v. Moore, 23 W. Va. 404.

We can perceive nothing in the Statute thus applied which amounts to an arbitrary deprivation of the rights of the citizen, and concur with the Supreme Court of Tennessee that this Act, which had been in force for more than sixty years before the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, was not invalidated by it, while the Fifth Amendment had no application whatever.

The statement in the judgment of affirmance is that "the court adjudges that there is no evidence to support the verdict of the jury;" and if this were taken literally, it would follow that no recovery could be had, as matter of law; and we therefore suppose that the language used indicates simply the opinion of the court that the jury ought not to have found the verdict that they did, and that the judgment of the court below, refusing to grant a new trial upon the facts, would have been reversed, but for the existence of the Statute, which made it error to award it. Knorrville Iron Co. v. Dobson, 15 Lea, 409, 418.

Assuming that the validity of the Statute was drawn in question, yet there was clearly color for the motion to dismiss, and the case may be disposed of upon the motion to affirm. That motion is sustained, and the judgment is accordingly affirmed.

Construction of will—execution of power—probate of will in one State, effect of in another State—jurisdiction over state judgments.

1. Where a will of a citizen of South Carolina, executed there, directed a power of appointment to be executed by the will of the person therein authorized to execute the power, he intended a will executed according to the laws of South Carolina.
2. Where the will of a person executing the power was made in North Carolina, she residing there, the probate of the will in North Carolina established that the will was executed according to the law of that State, but did not establish that the will was executed according to the law of South Carolina, nor did it undertake to adjudge that it was a good execution of the power.
3. Where the Supreme Court of South Carolina decided that the will was not executed according to the law of that State and therefore held that it was not a good execution of the power, it did not refuse to give the judgment of the probate court of North Carolina, establishing the will, full faith and credit, nor the same force and effect as it had in North Carolina.
4. To give this court jurisdiction of a writ of error to a state court, it must appear affirmatively, not only that a federal question was presented for decision to the highest court of the State having jurisdiction, but that its decision was necessary to the determination of the cause, and that it was actually decided, or that the judgment as rendered could not have been given without deciding it.

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction in the United States Supreme Court, where federal question arises, or where are drawn in question statutes, treaty or Constitution, see notes to Martin v. Hunter, 4: 97; Matthews v. Zane, 2: 654; Williams v. Norris, 6: 571.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of South Carolina to review a judgment of that court reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in Richmond County in that State that a power contained in a will was well executed and that the plaintiff, William H. Blount, was entitled to the property. On motion to dismiss. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Jos. Dan'l Pope and Robt. W. Shand, for defendant in error, for motion to dismiss.

Messrs. S. F. Phillips, Allen & Green and Blount & Murray in opposition to motion.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Sarah J. Harris, a citizen of the State of South Carolina, died at her residence in that State in December, 1885, leaving a last will and testament bearing date September 11, 1885, and, her surviving, an only child, Mrs. Mary D. Blount, whose domicile was that of her husband, William H. Blount, in Wilson County, in the State of North Carolina. Mrs. Harris' next nearest of kin was her sister, Caroline S. Walker, mother of Julius H. Walker. By her will Mrs. Harris gave, bequeathed and devised her estate, real and personal, which was all situated in South Carolina, to her nephew, Julius H. Walker (who was appointed executor), in trust for Mary D. Blount "for and during the term of her natural life," unless the trust were sooner executed, as provided in an item of the will not material to be considered here, and upon the death of Mrs. Blount the estate was "bequeathed and devised to the issue of the said Mrs. Blount, to them and their heirs forever, per stirpes and not per capita;" and if the said Mrs. Blount die without issue surviving her at the time of her death, then the same is devised and bequeathed to such person or persons and in such proportions as the said Mrs. Mary Delia Blount may appoint by her last will and testament duly executed, to the said appointees and their heirs forever." Mrs. Blount died at her home in North Carolina, without issue, in April, 1886. She left a will dated March 16, 1886, providing that "all my estate, both real and personal, whether legal or equitable, I devise, bequeath and absolutely give unto my beloved husband, to his only use and behoof, and hereby direct the trustee appointed by the last will and testament of my deceased mother, Mrs. S. J. Harris, of Columbia, in the State of South Carolina, to execute all such needful conveyances and releases as may effectually vest his title as such trustee, and convey the property and effects, to him devised by said last will of Mrs. S. J. Harris, to my said husband, W. H. Blount, to him and his heirs absolutely." This will was duly admitted to probate in the Probate Court of Wilson County, North Carolina, on the 26th day of April, 1886, the order of that court finding from the evidence of the subscribing witnesses that the paper writing propounded "is the last will and testament of M. Delia Blount, and that the same was duly executed by said M. Delia Blount." Letters testamentary issued June 3, and an exemplification of the probate proceedings was duly filed and admitted to probate in the proper probate court in South Carolina, in accordance with the Statute in that behalf, which provided: "If a will be regularly proved in any foreign court, an exemplification of such will may be admitted to probate in this State upon the exemplification and certificate of the judge of the court of probate; and the exemplification shall also be evidence of the devise of land in this State where the title of lands comes in question." Gen. Stat. S. C. 1882, p. 549, § 1875.

William H. Blount instituted an action on the equity side of the Court of Common Pleas in Richland County, South Carolina, against Julius H. Walker, who had qualified as executor and was in possession as trustee, and Mrs. Caroline S. Walker, setting forth the deaths of Mrs. Harris and Mrs. Blount and the wills, and claiming the entire estate of Mrs. Harris as the appointee by Mrs. Blount's will; alleging demand upon the trustee and executor and refusal; and demanding judgment that he be adjudged to be the owner of said estate; that Walker be required to account; and for general relief. Walker answered, submitting, under the advice of counsel, the question to the court "whether the will of M. Delia Blount is a valid execution of the power conferred upon her by the will of Sarah J. Harris, and whether said will of Mrs. Blount has been duly executed so as to pass the property of said Sarah J. Harris in the hands of this defendant." Mrs. Walker also answered, claiming to be entitled to the whole estate of Mrs. Harris as her sole heir after the death of Mrs. Blount, and alleging that Mrs. Blount's will was not executed as required by the laws of South Carolina, and was not, therefore, a valid execution of the power.

The cause was heard by the judge of the court of common pleas, who found, among other things, "that Mrs. Blount's will was duly proved in the probate court of North Carolina, in the county in which she resided, and a proper exemplification under the laws of South Carolina was admitted to probate in Richland County on the 19th May, 1886. The court of probate of North Carolina is, under the laws of North Carolina, a court of general jurisdiction in all matters testamentary. The exemplification of the judgment of that court, establishing this will, was properly proved according to the Acts of Congress. Mrs. Blount's will is not executed according to the laws of South Carolina. The question to be determined is whether Mrs. Blount's will is a valid execution of the power contained in Mrs. Harris' will. It is conceded in the argument, and is undoubtedly sound, that the appointee, under a power like the one under consideration, takes under the instrument creating the power, and not under the instrument of appointment. And in this case Mrs. Harris' will expressly conveys the property to the appointee under the power. The only requisite required by Mrs. Harris' will for the execution of this power, is that the same shall be by 'will duly executed;' and in this case that formality has been complied with, and is shown by the judgment of the court of her domicil." And it was "ordered, adjudged and decreed that the power is well executed, and the plaintiff is entitled to the property set out in the complaint and in the hands of the defendant, Julius H. Walker."

Defendants appealed from this decree to the Supreme Court of South Carolina, which on the 28d day of April, 1888, reversed the judgment of the circuit court. The court held that the power was not well executed, for the reason that Mrs. Harris had by her will conferred a power which the donee could only exercise "by her last will and testament duly executed," which meant a will duly executed according to the laws of South Carolina, which this will was not; and the court said: "This paper was doubtless a valid will in North Carolina, sufficient to pass any property which Mrs. Blount was entitled to in her own right in that State, and any personal property which she owned anywhere, and was therefore, no doubt, properly admitted to probate there, as well as here, upon the exemplification under the Statute. But the question here is, not whether Mrs. Blount has made a will disposing of her own property, but whether the paper propounded as such is a valid execution of the power conferred by the will of Mrs. Harris; and for the reasons above stated we do not think it is." Blount v. Walker, 28 S. C. 545. The cause was remanded, and subsequent proceedings taken in the court of common pleas, and another judgment rendered by the supreme court upon the question of who was or were entitled to take upon the failure of Mrs. Blount to make a valid appointment; but it is not claimed here that any federal question arose thereon.

To the judgment of the supreme court a writ of error was sued out from this court, and the federal question relied on to sustain our jurisdiction is, that the Supreme Court of South Carolina did not give full faith and credit to the judgment of the Probate Court of Wilson County, North Carolina, admitting Mrs. Blount's will to probate.

We cannot see that any such question is presented by this record. The Probate Court of Wilson County, North Carolina, had no jurisdiction to declare the will duly executed "according to the laws of South Carolina," or that it was a good execution of the power of appointment, and did not undertake to adjudge to that effect, and it is not denied that Mrs. Blount's will was not executed according to those laws. The Supreme Court of South Carolina did not refuse to the judgment of the probate court of North Carolina full faith and credit. It assumed that the will was properly admitted to probate in North Carolina, as well as in South Carolina, by an exemplification thereof, under the Statute to that effect in the latter State, but it held that when Mrs. Harris prescribed the mode in which the power of appointment should be exercised, by the use of the words "by her last will and testament duly executed," she intended a will duly executed according to the laws of South Carolina, and not a will duly executed according to the laws of any State or country in which the donee of the power, Mrs. Blount, might happen to be domiciled at the time of her death. The probate of Mrs. Blount's will in North Carolina established that the will was executed according to the law of the State where she was domiciled, but it did not establish that the will was executed according to the law of South Carolina, as it is conceded it was not. When, therefore, the Supreme Court of South Carolina, in construing Mrs. Harris' will, arrived at the conclusion that the estate of the latter would only pass to such person as might receive an appointment by a will duly executed according to the laws of South Carolina, that was an end of the case, and whether that conclusion was right or wrong is a matter with which we are not concerned. If we were of a different opinion, and, entertaining jurisdiction, were to reverse the judgment of the Supreme Court of South Carolina, we should do it upon the ground that that court erred in the construction of Mrs. Harris' will, and not upon any ground connected with the judgment of the probate court of North Carolina, which could not and did not determine that question. Counsel says that the position of the plaintiff in error is, "that the decision of the state court necessarily involved the question whether the will of Mrs. Blount was her 'last will and testament duly executed'; that the judgment of the probate court of North Carolina is conclusive of this; and whether in the decision the state court has given this judgment the same force and effect as it has in North Carolina, is the federal question." But the state court conceded that the judgment of the probate court of North Carolina established that the will of Mrs. Blount was her last will and testament duly executed, and its decision did not in the slightest degree proceed upon the denial of that fact, but gave the judgment the same force and effect that it had in North Carolina, for in neither of the States would the will, as such, dispose of property that did not belong to the testatrix.

To give this court jurisdiction of a writ of error to a state court, it must appear affirmatively, not only that a federal question was presented for decision to the highest court of the State having jurisdiction, but that its decision was necessary to the determination of the cause, and that it was actually decided, or that the judgment as rendered could not have been given without deciding it. *New Orleans Water Works Co. v. v.
RICHARD W. SIMPSON.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 572-593.)

Will, construction of—power of disposition, how exercised—South Carolina law—execution of power—method of execution—words construed.

1. The court is authorized to put itself in the position occupied by a testator, in order, in view of the circumstances then existing, to discover from that standpoint what the testator intended by his will.
2. The power given by a will to dispose of, by will, a bequest of three fourths of a bond and mortgage, the enjoyment of which for life is bequeathed to the donee of the power, is properly executed by the will of the donee which, after referring to the bequest, devises and bequeaths the entire property and estate, to which she is "in any wise entitled," to her husband.
3. By the Constitution of South Carolina, adopted in 1868, and the legislation in pursuance thereof, Mrs. Clemson had as full legal capacity to make a will as if she were a feme sole.
4. If the donee of the power intends to execute it, and the mode be in other respects unexceptionable, that intention, however manifested, whether directly or indirectly, positively or by just implication, will make the execution valid and operative.
5. Three classes of cases have been held to be sufficient demonstrations of an intended execution of a power: (1) where there has been some reference in the will, or other instrument, to the power; (2) or a reference to the property, which is the subject on which it is to be executed; (3) or where the provision in the will or other instrument, executed by the donee of the power, would otherwise have no operation, except as an execution of the power.
6. The words "in any wise entitled" are sufficient to cover not only property which the donee of the power held in her own full right, but also property which she held in a limited right under her mother's will.

Swift v. Tyson, 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 1 (10: 865).

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of South Carolina, dismissing the bill of complaint of Isabella Lee, an infant, by her next friend, Gideon Lee, against Richard W. Simpson.

The following are the material facts involved in the case:

On May 18, 1854, Mrs. Floride Calhoun was seized and possessed of the tract of land situate in that part of Pickens district which is now Oconee County, in the State of South Carolina, on the east side of the Seneca River, known as the Fort Hill place, containing eleven hundred and ten acres, more or less, and on that day she and her daughter, Cornelia M. Calhoun, sold and conveyed that tract of land, together with certain personal property, to Andrew P. Calhoun, for the sum of $49,000, Cornelia M. Calhoun having no interest in the real estate. Andrew P. Calhoun executed his bond under seal to Mrs. Calhoun and Cornelia M. Calhoun, conditioned for the payment of $40,200 to Mrs. Floride Calhoun, and the remaining $8,800 to Cornelia, and, to secure the payment of the bond representing the purchase money, and as a part of the same transaction, at the same time executed and delivered to Mrs. Calhoun and Cornelia separate mortgages of the same tract of land and of the personal property, to secure the payment of the sums of money mentioned in the bond.

On the 27th of June, 1863, Mrs. Calhoun made her last will and testament, whereby, among other things, she devised and bequeathed as follows:

"2. To my daughter Anna Maria, wife of Thomas G. Clemson, of Maryland, I give, devise and bequeath during her life, and for her sole and separate use, the following property: my house and lot in Pendleton and the land attached and belonging thereto, purchased by me from Mrs. William Adger, together with the furniture and everything in the house and upon the premises, reserving, however, the silver and such other articles as I may hereinafter specifically give to others; also all my jewelry and the silver cross and prayer book presented to me by the church at Newport, Rhode Island. At Anna's death I devise and bequeath all the above-mentioned property to her daughter, Floride Clemson, and at the death of Floride, if she dies without issue, I devise and bequeath it to my sons, John's and William's, children then living equally, among them, or, if they be dead, to their issue then living."

"19. I am possessed still of a large residue of property, consisting principally of a debt due me by my son Andrew for the purchase of Fort Hill, amounting to about forty thousand two hundred dollars, secured to me by bond and mortgage. I have also an unsecured interest in a gold mine in Dahlonega, Georgia, belonging to the estate of my late husband, and also an interest in the estate of my second son, Patrick, and second daughter, Cornelia, besides other property. Whatever real or personal property I may possess at my death and not hereinbefore specifically or otherwise disposed of, I direct my executors to sell whenever they shall deem it advisable.

I direct my executors to collect, as fast as possible, the above-mentioned residue of my estate, and, after paying off my debts and the legacy to Calhoun Clemson, the remainder I wish divided into four parts, which I dispose of as follows:

"20. One part, being the fourth of the above residue, I give and bequeath to my daughter Anna during her life and for her sole and separate use; and at her death I will and bequeath it to her daughter Floride, and at Floride's death, if she dies without issue, I will and bequeath it to the children of my deceased sons John and William then living, equally among them, or to their issue if they be dead, issue to represent the parent. The better to effect my intentions in regard to the property in this and the second clause given to Anna, I appoint Edward Noble, of Abbeville, trustee for it and vest in him the legal title. Should Anna at any time wish to sell the house and lands in Pendleton or all or any portion of the property given to her for life, the trustee, provided it meets with his approval, is authorized to dispose of it according to the wishes of my daughter, upon having her written request for so doing. The proceeds of such sale the trustee shall hold subject to the trusts and limitations declared in reference to the original property. The trustee is authorized and required to invest the proceeds, and also the fourth part of the residue herein given to her, in such property or in such way as she may in writing direct, provided it meets with his approval. The trustee is authorized and required from time to time to change such investments as often as he may be directed so to do by my said daughter in writing, provided it meets with his approval, holding always the substituted property or reinvestments subject to the trusts and limitations aforesaid. If from death or any other cause there is no trustee, or if Anna at any time shall desire to change her trustee, she shall have the power so to do and to appoint another by any instrument in writing, under seal, executed by her in the presence of two subscribing witnesses; and as often as she may desire to change her trustee she shall have the power so to do by observing the form and solemnity above described.

"21. One fourth part of said residue of my said estate I give and bequeath to my granddaughter Floride Elizabeth Clemson, but if Floride should die without leaving issue I give and bequeath it at her death to the children of my sons John and William, or the issue of them if they be dead, the issue to take by representation.

"22. The remaining two fourths I dispose of as follows: To Kate P. Calhoun, my daughter-in-law, I give and bequeath the one half of the one fourth of said residue of my estate, to be enjoyed by her during widowhood. At her death or marriage, whichever first happens, I give and bequeath the same to such of her children—being my grandchildren—as may then be alive; but should either of my said grandchildren die under twenty-one years of age, leaving no child or children, the share of such deceasing grandchild shall go to the survivors or survivor of them or their issue, the issue representing the parent. If Kate should die before me, what I have given her in this will is not to revert to my estate, but is to go to her children—my grandchildren—living at my death, subject to the conditions and limitations above expressed.

"23. The remaining fourth and half of a fourth of the aforesaid residue of my estate I give and bequeath to my grandsons, John C. Calhoun and Benjamin A. P. Calhoun, sons of my deceased son John, and William Lowndes Calhoun, child of my second son William, equally among them; and should either of them die under twenty-one years of age, leaving no issue, the share of such deceased child shall go to the survivor or survivors."

On the 22d of January, 1866, Mrs. Calhoun duly made a codicil to her last will and testament, wherein, among other things, she revoked the devise of the real property in Pendleton made to Anna Clemson in the second paragraph of her will, and devised the same to other persons, and provided as follows:

"2. By the nineteenth clause of the will I directed the said bond debt on my deceased son Andrew, secured by mortgage on Fort Hill, together with all other property possessed by me and not before disposed of, to be collected by my executors and the proceeds to be divided into four parts. One part I gave to Anna, one part to her daughter Floride, and the two other parts to Kate and her children, as will appear by clauses 20, 21, 22 and 23 of the will. I desire now to change the disposition of the said bond and mortgage debt, and do now give and bequeath it in the following manner: Three fourths of my interest in said bond and mortgage debt, amounting to about forty thousand two hundred dollars, I hereby give and bequeath to my daughter, Anna M. Clemson, to be enjoyed by her under clause twenty of the will, and according to the provisions of that clause to vest in the same trustee and to be subject to all the powers, trusts, conditions and limitations of that clause precisely as the bequests therein made were subject to them, with this exception and alteration, that my daughter Anna is hereby authorized and empowered by a last will and testament duly executed by her, to dispose of this bequest of three fourths of said bond and mortgage debt as she pleases. If she does not thus dispose of it at her death, I give and bequeath it, the said three fourths, to her daughter Floride, and should the said Floride die without leaving issue I give and bequeath it at her death to her brother, Calhoun Clemson; but nevertheless, Floride shall likewise have power to dispose of it at her death as she pleases, by a last will and testament duly executed by her. By clause second of the will I gave the furniture and every article of the property in my house in Pendleton and upon the premises, with certain reservations, and also my jewelry and some other small articles, to my said daughter Anna. I now confirm to her the bequests of aforesaid furniture and all other personal property embraced in said second clause, which it is my will that she shall enjoy for life as her sole and separate estate, and at her death I give and bequeath all this personal property to her daughter Floride absolutely. To Anna I also give and bequeath the oil portrait of my mother, which by clause fifth of my will I gave to my daughter-in-law Kate.

"8. The remaining one fourth part of my interest in said bond-and-mortgage debt against the estate of my deceased son Andrew I give and bequeath to Floride Elizabeth Clemson, my granddaughter, but if she dies without leaving issue I give and bequeath it to her brother, John Calhoun Clemson. She, nevertheless, is hereby authorized and empowered to dispose of said fourth part as she pleases, by her last will and testament duly executed.

"4. Should my granddaughter Floride's death occur before mine, what I have given her in the will and codicil shall not fall into the residuum of my estate, but I give and bequeath it to her mother, my daughter Anna, who shall take it subject to all the trusts, powers and limitations imposed upon the direct bequest to her; and should my daughter Anna's death occur before mine, what I have given her in the several clauses of the will and codicil shall not fall into the residuum of my estate, but I give and bequeath the same to her daughter Floride, who shall take and enjoy it as her mother would have done if living, subject to the same trusts, powers, limitations and conditions; and should both Anna and Floride die before me, what has been given them in the several clauses of the will and codicil shall not fall into the said residuum, but I give and bequeath the whole to my grandson, John Calhoun Clemson.

"5. Should I at any time collect the aforesaid bond-and-mortgage debt, or any part of it, or should Fort Hill be purchased with it, or the money be invested in any other property or be retained in hand, the property thus purchased, the property thus obtained by investment and the money thus retained shall be considered and held to be in the place of and the same as the aforesaid bond and mortgage, and shall pass under this codicil as if the same were still in the form of said bond and mortgage—that is to say, shall pass to my daughter Anna and granddaughter Floride, as aforesaid bond and mortgage debt is directed to be divided between them."

On the 12th of March, 1866, Mrs. Floride Calhoun and Thomas G. Clemson (to whom letters of administration had been granted in February, 1866, on the personal estate of Cornelia M. Calhoun, who had departed this life intestate and unmarried in that year), as administrator of the personal estate of Cornelia, exhibited their bill in the Court of Equity for the District of Pickens, State of South Carolina, against Andrew P. Calhoun and others, for the foreclosure of the mortgage on the tract of land known as the Fort Hill place, executed to secure payment of the bond aforesaid, and for the sale of the land for that purpose, and at the July Term, 1866, of the court a decree was made, whereby it was adjudged that the mortgage be foreclosed and the land sold, which decree, on appeal, was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the State of South Carolina, and the cause remanded to the circuit court for further proceedings in accordance therewith.

During the pendency of that suit, and on the 25th of July, 1866, Mrs. Floride Calhoun departed this life, leaving in full force her last will and testament, as modified by the codicil aforesaid; and thereafter, on the 7th of August, 1866, her last will and testament and the codicil thereto were duly admitted to probate, and Edward Noble, one of the persons mentioned as executors therein, duly qualified as such on the same day.

In August, 1869, Floride E. Clemson intermarried with Gideon Lee, of the State of New York, and the plaintiff, Isabella Lee, is the only child of such marriage, and, on the 27th of August, 1871, the said Floride E. Lee, formerly Clemson, died intestate, leaving surviving her, as her sole heirs-at-law and distributees, her husband, Gideon Lee, and her daughter, Isabella Lee, the plaintiff.

On the 29th of September, 1871, Mrs. Anna C. Clemson made her last will and testament, as follows:

"In the name of God, Amen.

"Whereas I am entitled to legacies under the last will of my deceased mother, Floride Calhoun, and to a distributive share in the several estates of my deceased sister, Cornelia Calhoun, and my brother, Patrick Calhoun, and, notwithstanding my coverture, have full testamentary power to dispose of the same:

"Now I, Anna Calhoun Clemson, the wife of Thomas G. Clemson, of the Town of Pendleton, in the County of Anderson and State aforesaid, being of sound and disposing mind, memory and understanding, do make this my last will and testament in manner following:

"I will, devise and bequeath the entire property and estate to which I am now in any wise entitled and which I may hereafter acquire, of whatever the same may consist, to my beloved husband, Thomas G. Clemson, absolutely and in fee simple; but should my husband, Thomas G. Clemson, depart this life leaving me his survivor, or should he survive me and then die intestate, in either event I will, devise and bequeath my entire property and estate, as well as that which I may hereafter acquire, of whatever the same may consist, to my granddaughter, Isabella Lee, the child of Gideon Lee, of the State of New York, absolutely and in fee simple. I hereby nominate and constitute Thomas G. Clemson executor of this my will."

The proceedings for foreclosure against Andrew P. Calhoun duly went to decree, Noble, executor, having been substituted as one of the complainants, under which the Fort Hill property was sold and purchased by Thomas G. Clemson, as trustee of his wife, on January 1, 1872; and on June 10, 1875, title was made for the same, in pursuance of an order of the court, to Thomas G. Clemson, as trustee of Anna M. Clemson, under the will of Mrs. Floride Calhoun, he having been duly appointed such trustee on the 18th of December, 1871. The consideration for said purchase and conveyance appears to have been the mortgage debt of Andrew P. Calhoun, and Mr. Clemson, it is alleged, also discharged legacies and demands to the amount of $6,964.98 in the purchase and redemption of said property.

On the 5th of November, 1873, a partition in kind was made of the Fort Hill property between Anna M. Clemson and Thomas G. Clemson, as her trustee, on the one part, and the plaintiff and Gideon Lee, as her guardian, on the other part, by which one fourth part thereof, amounting to about 288 acres, was allotted and set off to the plaintiff, and the remainder, amounting to about 814 acres, was allotted and set off to said Anna M. Clemson and Thomas G. Clemson; and the plaintiff thereupon entered into possession of the parcel so allotted to her, and has ever since remained in possession thereof.

On the 12th of September, 1875, Anna M. Clemson, otherwise known as Anna C. Clemson, died, leaving in full force and unrevoked her said last will and testament, bearing date September 29, 1871, which was duly admitted to probate; and from September, 1875, to the time of his death, Thomas G. Clemson remained in quiet, open and continuous possession of the property, claiming to hold the same as his individual property in fee simple.

On April 6, 1888, Thomas G. Clemson died, leaving in full force and unrevoked his last will and testament, bearing date the 6th of November, 1886, together with a codicil thereto, bearing date the 26th of March, 1887, which will and codicil were duly admitted to probate on the 20th of April, 1888. In and by the codicil the defendant Simpson was named and constituted the sole executor of the will, and the Fort Hill property was devised to him on certain trusts, fully set out therein, in virtue whereof the defendant entered into and now remains in possession of the Fort Hill property.

The bill in this case was filed on the 26th of November, 1888. After setting forth the contents of the will and codicil of Mrs. Floride Calhoun, the foreclosure of the mortgage given by Andrew P. Calhoun, the death of Mrs. Floride Calhoun, the probate of her will and codicil, the marriage of her granddaughter, Floride Elizabeth Clemson, to Gideon Lee, the status of the plaintiff as their daughter, the death of Mrs. Lee, leaving her husband, Gideon Lee, and the plaintiff as her sole heirs-at-law and distributees, it alleged that the property so devised by Mrs. Floride Calhoun for the use of Mrs. Clemson passed to the plaintiff under the provisions of the will of Mrs. Calhoun; that, after the death of Mrs. Calhoun, a decree was made in the foreclosure suit for the sale of the property; that under that decree it was sold, in January, 1872, to Thomas G. Clemson, as trustee for his wife, the said Anna M. Clemson, under the last will of Mrs. Calhoun and the codicil thereto, Clemson having been substituted as trustee in the place of Edward Noble; that the sale was confirmed and the title to the property conveyed to Clemson, trustee as aforesaid, in consideration of the premises, which were a recital of the proceedings in the case and the nominal consideration of three dollars, no money having been paid, and no cash paid into court or into the hands of its officers, except the costs; that the deed to Clemson was duly recorded, and the property thus taken in part payment of the debt of Andrew P. Calhoun was held continuously by Clemson as trustee, up to the time of his death, under the trusts created by the will and codicil of Mrs. Calhoun; that thereafter, the plaintiff being then entitled to one fourth of the property in fee simple absolute under the will and codicil of Mrs. Calhoun, and Mrs. Clemson being entitled to a life estate in three fourths thereof for her sole and separate use, with remainder to the plaintiff on the death of Mrs. Clemson, in case the latter did not exercise the power of appointment by her last will and testament, as provided by the will and codicil of Mrs. Calhoun, the plaintiff's father, acting for her, and Clemson, as trustee under the will and codicil of Mrs. Calhoun, made an informal partition of the property, and since that time the plaintiff had been in possession of about 300 acres of it, and the remainder of it, consisting of about 814 acres, had been in possession of Clemson up to the time of his death, and since that time in the possession of the defendant, claiming under Clemson, as trustee under the will and codicil of Mrs. Calhoun; that Mrs. Clemson died in September, 1875, without having exercised the power of appointment conferred upon her by the will and codicil of Mrs. Calhoun; that thereupon the plaintiff became entitled, in fee simple absolute, to the three fourths of the property then in the possession of Clemson, as trustee, and to the rents and profits of that part of the property from that time; that Clemson remained in possession of that part of the property subject to the trusts of the will and codicil of Mrs. Calhoun, from the time of the death of Mrs. Clemson until he died, in April, 1888, leaving the plaintiff his sole heir-at-law, during the whole of which time he collected the rents and profits of the property, amounting in all to over $31,000, without including interest; that since the death of Clemson the defendant had in some manner, claiming under Clemson, acquired possession of the 814 acres, and of the rents and profits thereof, without having been appointed trustee under the will and codicil of Mrs. Calhoun; and that the defendant was about to make a deed of the 814 acres, and of such accumulated rents and profits, to uses and purposes which would wholly defeat such rights of the plaintiff.

The bill waived an answer on oath, and prayed for an accounting by the defendant of the rents and profits of the 814 acres; that the trusts on which Clemson held the property be declared; that the cloud upon the plaintiff's title to it be removed; that she be adjudged to hold the property in fee simple absolute; that the defendant account for the personal property in which Mrs. Clemson had a life estate, and in which the plaintiff has an estate in remainder or otherwise which came into his possession; and that he be enjoined from conveying any part of the property, or any of the property of which Clemson died possessed, to any use or trust which would tend in any manner to cloud the title of the plaintiff or defeat her rights in the premises; and for general relief.

The answer set up that Mrs. Clemson, by her last will and testament, duly executed and duly admitted to probate, disposed of the property held under the trusts of the will and codicil of Mrs. Calhoun, in favor of her husband, Thomas G. Clemson; that from and immediately after her death the property vested in him in fee simple; and that his continuous and undisturbed possession thereof from that time was in his own right, and not as trustee.

After a replication, proofs were taken, and the case was heard by the circuit court, with the result before stated.

The opinion of that court is reported in 89 Fed. Rep. 235. It passed upon what is the only material question in the case, namely, as to whether Mrs. Clemson, by her will, exercised the power given to her by the will and codicil of Mrs. Calhoun, to dispose of the bequest of three fourths of the interest of Mrs. Calhoun in the bond-and-mortgage debt of Andrew P. Calhoun, amounting to about $40,200. The conclusion of the court was, that the will of Mrs. Clemson referred to the property which was the subject of the power and also to the power itself; that it was her intention to dispose of the property in question by her will; and that such intention was carried out in due execution of the power.

The recital in the will of Mrs. Clemson is as follows: "Whereas I am entitled to legacies under the last will of my deceased mother, Floride Calhoun, and to a distributive share in the several estates of my deceased sister, Cornelia Calhoun, and my brother, Patrick Calhoun, and, notwithstanding my coverture, have full testamentary power to dispose of the same." It then proceeds as follows: "I will, devise and bequeath the entire property and estate to which I am now in any wise entitled and which I may hereafter acquire, of whatever the same may consist, to my beloved husband, Thomas G. Clemson, absolutely and in fee simple; but should my husband, Thomas G. Clemson, depart this life, leaving me his survivor, or should he survive me and then die intestate, in either event I will, devise and bequeath my entire property and estate, as well as that which I may hereafter acquire, of whatever the same may consist, to my granddaughter, Isabella Lee, the child of Gideon Lee, of the State of New York, absolutely and in fee simple."

As Mrs. Clemson died before her husband, and as he did not die intestate, this last devise and bequest to the plaintiff did not become operative, and the clause containing it is of no effect, except as its language may bear upon the proper construction of the entire instrument.

The view taken by the circuit court was that, as Mrs. Clemson had the right, for her life, to the enjoyment of the property held in trust for her under the will and codicil of Mrs. Calhoun, and the absolute power of disposing of it by will, she treated it by her will as being as much hers as the distributive share, referred to in her will, in the several estates of her sister and brother; that it would be too narrow and technical a construction of the will, under the circumstances, so to limit the language of the devise and bequest as to exclude the exercise of the power; that the mention of the distributive share in the estates of her sister and her brother allowed it to be said that the language of the devise and bequest might have some effect by means of her interest in such distributive share, but that would not be all the effect which the words imported; that if the intention to pass the property held in trust could be discovered, such intention ought to prevail; that the intent to dispose of such property was apparent on the face of the will; that, as it plainly referred to the property covered by the power, its language could not be satisfied unless the instrument should operate as an execution of the power; that the recital in the will that, notwithstanding her coverture, she had "full testamentary power to dispose of the same" (referring to the legacies under the will of her mother and to a distributive share in the estates of her sister and brother), could not be regarded as merely a reference to the fact that, shortly before that time, married women in South Carolina had, by the Constitution of 1868, and the legislation consequent thereon, been enabled to dispose of their property by will, because in that view such statement would have been wholly uncalled for, as she could alienate her own property in any way she chose, while the property held in trust for her for her life could be disposed of by her only by will; and that therefore the more reasonable inference was that she referred, by the words "full testamentary power," to the will of her mother, rather than to her own recently acquired legal capacity, though a married woman, to make a will, as to the property in which she did not have merely a life estate, with a power of appointment.

By the will and codicil of Mrs. Calhoun, the following bequests or legacies were left to Mrs. Clemson: (1) a bequest for life of three fourths of the bond and mortgage debt due by Andrew P. Calhoun; (2) a devise and bequest for life of certain real estate, furniture and other personal property mentioned in the second clause of the will and in the second clause of the codicil; (3) a share for life in a part of the residuary estate left after the payment of debts; (4) a share for life in the remainder of such residuary estate, if her grandsons should die under age and without issue; (5) her grandmother's portrait. All of these legacies, except such portrait, were made to Mrs. Clemson for her life. In regard to the portrait, as Mrs. Calhoun died in July, 1866, and Mr. and Mrs. Clemson were then both of them living, the rights of Mr. Clemson under the common-law rule immediately attached to the portrait, and it became at once his personal property. The legacies to Mrs. Clemson or for her benefit were all personal property at the time of her death. The fifth clause of the codicil to the will of Mrs. Calhoun directs that if Fort Hill, the property in question, should be purchased with the bond-and-mortgage debt, the property so purchased should "be considered and held to be in the place of and the same as the aforesaid bond and mortgage," and should "pass under this codicil as if the same were still in the form of said bond and mortgage;" that is to say, should pass to Mrs. Clemson and her daughter Floride, as the "aforesaid bond-and-mortgage debt is directed to be divided between them." In her will and codicil, Mrs. Calhoun speaks of the provisions made for Mrs. Clemson as "bequests" and also as the "property" given to her.

At the time Mrs. Clemson's will was made, the court had ordered, in July, 1871, the sale of the Fort Hill property to satisfy the mortgage debt, which then amounted to over $65,000. It was manifest that the property would have to be purchased by the mortgagees; but as, in fact, it had not been purchased when the will was made, the mortgage debt was still, under the will of Mrs. Calhoun, a legacy of personal property, and would be spoken of properly, in the will of Mrs. Clemson, as a legacy to which she was entitled under the will of her mother. Moreover, by the terms of that will, the investment in the Fort Hill property was still to be considered as personal property.

Mrs. Clemson's distributive share in her sister's estate was, at the time Mrs. Clemson made her will, of small value, as she ultimately received from it, at most, only $601.94. Her share in her brother's estate was at that time also small, amounting only to $120.49, although, in fact, she received $150. This was all the property which she had, or supposed she had, when she made her will, and all that she intended to dispose of.

The rents which had accumulated on the Fort Hill property before it was sold under the decree of foreclosure did not belong to Mrs. Clemson, but belonged to the estate of Andrew P. Calhoun, the mortgage debtor; and when they were received by Mr. Clemson in part payment of the debt they were to be held by him as trustee of Mrs. Clemson under the will and codicil of Mrs. Calhoun.

Putting ourselves in the position occupied by Mrs. Clemson when she made her will, as we are authorized to do, in view of the circumstances then existing, in order to discover from that standpoint what she intended (Blake v. Hawkins, 98 U. S. 815, 824 [25: 189, 141]; Postlethwaite's Appeal, 68 Pa. 477, 480; McCall v. McCall, 4 Rich. Eq. 448, 455; Scaife v. Thomson, 15 S. C. 837, 857; Clark v. Clark, 19 S. C. 845, 848, 849), we are of opinion that the will of Mrs. Clemson was intended by her to be, and was, a full execution of the power. She was entitled to bequests and legacies under the will and codicil of Mrs. Calhoun, which they spoke of as "property," and which Mrs. Clemson was authorized to dispose of as she pleased. It was lawful for her to execute such power in favor of her husband. The interest to which the power applied was at the time personal property, and was a legacy or bequest. Her will refers to the fact that she is entitled to legacies under the will of her mother, and to a distributive share in the estates of her sister and her brother. This is the property which she believed she had; this is what she really had; and this is what she intended to dispose of by her will. The will, therefore, in referring to the legacies to which she is entitled under the will of her mother, refers expressly to the subject matter of the power. The second article of the codicil to the mother's will, after bequeathing to Mrs. Clemson, for life, the three-fourths interest in the bond-and-mortgage debt, gives her the power "to dispose of this bequest," thus applying that word to the remainder which the daughter took no interest in, but merely a power to dispose of; and Mrs. Clemson, in using the word "legacies," must have intended to include the interest in remainder, which her mother had called a "bequest."

As to the legacy of the three-fourths interest for life in the bond-and-mortgage debt, she had only a power of appointment. Her property in it had only that extent; but it had that extent; and to that extent she regarded it as her property, which consisted of the right to the use of it for her life and of the power of disposing of it by her will. The statement that, notwithstanding her coverture, she had "full testamentary power to dispose of the same," refers to the fact that, although she was a married woman, she had power to dispose of the same by a will, such power being given to her by the will of her mother. The expression has the same meaning as if it had read "full power to dispose of the same by will."

This power so to dispose of the subject of the power created by the will of her mother she possessed fully, without the aid of the provision of the Constitution and legislation of South Carolina enabling married women to dispose of their own property by will, because without a statute of that kind married women could always execute powers of appointment. The provision of the Constitution and Statute might have been necessary to authorize her to dispose by will of her distributive shares of the estates of her sister and her brother; but with her power to dispose of such shares by her will we are not here concerned. By the Constitution, adopted in 1868, and the legislation in pursuance thereof, Mrs. Clemson had as full legal capacity to make a will as if she were a feme sole, and she needed no other power to enable her to do so. Her mother died in 1866, and the power conferred by that will and codicil upon Mrs. Clemson was conferred upon her as a married woman, and was afterwards exercised by her as a married woman.

We then come to the following language in the will: "I will, devise and bequeath the entire property and estate to which I am now in any wise entitled and which I may hereafter acquire, of whatever the same may consist, to my beloved husband, Thomas G. Clemson, absolutely and in fee simple." Outside of her interest in the bond and mortgage on the property in question, to which she was entitled as a legacy under the will of her mother, she had practically no property, her interest in her brother's and sister's estates being of such small value. Unless, therefore, by referring to legacies under the will of her mother, she refers to the interest in the bond and mortgage, all that she could refer to as having come to her under the will of her mother would be, at most, the oil portrait of her grandmother. It cannot be reasonably supposed that that is the proper construction of the will. As for the interest or income she had derived during her life from the bond-and-mortgage property, the moment it was received it became her property; and it could not properly be regarded as covered by the expression of legacies to which she was entitled under the will of her mother.

The question of the execution of a power is very fully discussed by Mr. Justice Story in Blagge v. Miles, 1 Story, 426. The rule laid down in that case is that, if the donee of the power intends to execute it, and the mode be in other respects unexceptionable, that intention, however manifested, whether directly or indirectly, positively or by just implication, will make the execution valid and operative; that the intention to execute the power must be apparent and clear, so that the transaction is not fairly susceptible of any other interpretation, but if it be doubtful, under all the circumstances, then that doubt will prevent it from being deemed an execution of the power; and that it is not necessary, however, that the intention to execute the power should appear by express terms or recitals in the instrument, but it is sufficient that it appears by words, acts or deeds demonstrating the intention. Judge Story states, as the result of the English authorities, that three classes of cases have been held to be sufficient demonstrations of an intended execution of a power: (1) where there has been some reference in the will, or other instrument, to the power; (2) or a reference to the property, which is the subject on which it is to be executed; (3) or where the provision in the will or other instrument, executed by the donee of the power, would otherwise be ineffectual, or a mere nullity; in other words, it would have no operation, except as an execution of the power. The rule thus stated was referred to with approval by this court in Blake v. Hawkins, 98 U. S. 315, 326 [25: 189, 141], and in Warner v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co., 109 U. S. 357, 366 [27: 962, 965]; by the Court of Appeals of New York, in White v. Hicks, 88 N. Y. 383, 392; and by the Supreme Court of Illinois, in Prink v. Eggleston, 92 Ill. 515, 538, 539, 547. See also Meeker v. Bretnall, 38 N. J. Eq. 845.

Nor is the rule different under the decisions of the courts of South Carolina. Hopkins v. Mazyck, Rich. Eq. Cas. 263; Porcher v. Daniel, 12 Rich. Eq. 349; Boyd v. Satterwhite, 10 S. C. 45; Bilderback v. Boyce, 14 S. C. 528; Moody v. Tedder, 16 S. C. 557.

The counsel for the appellant relies with great confidence on the case of Bilderback v. Boyce, supra, where real estate was devised by a father to trustees, to permit his son to take the income for life, with remainder to such persons as the son by his will might appoint, and, in default of appointment, to the children of the son. The son by his will gave, devised and bequeathed "all the rest and residue of my estate, whatever and wherever," to persons named, but did not mention the power or the trust property. He had real estate in his own right. The court held that there was no execution of the power, on the ground that the will disposed in general terms of the whole estate of the donee of the power, without any reference in terms to the power or the property, and that the donee's own property satisfied the terms of the will. The land to which the power related was not mentioned in the will, nor was the power referred to, and the terms of the will were satisfied by the property which the son left, without including that as to which the power existed. But the court cites with approval the case of Blagge v. Miles, supra, and quotes the passage from it before referred to, and takes as its guide, as the result of all the American authorities, the principle that "the intention to execute must be apparent and clear, so that the transaction is not fairly susceptible of any other interpretation."

In the subsequent case of Moody v. Tedder, supra, one Griggs, by his will, devised and bequeathed to his wife, for life, all his property, both real and personal, empowering her to use and dispose of so much of it as might be necessary for her comfortable support and maintenance, in such style and manner as she might see fit, and gave whatever portion might be remaining of the property after the death of his wife to the wife of one Tedder. The widow of Griggs, for a consideration, conveyed to Tedder all her "interest and life estate" in the "property left to me for life" by the will of Griggs. It was held that the widow of Griggs, as life tenant, had an absolute power of disposing of the property, and that the conveyance to Tedder carried not only the life estate but also the power of disposal, and must be referred to the power which the widow possessed, whether it purported to be an execution of the power or not. The view of the court was that, as the words of the conveyance were "all my interest and life estate," and as Mrs. Griggs had, besides the life estate, no other interest in the property, and as express reference was made to the property as to which the power existed, by describing it as "property left to me for life" by the will of Griggs, her deed must be considered as conveying all her rights in the estate, including her power of disposal, although the conveyance made no reference in terms to such power. The court said that while it was true that the word "interest" was not the technical term to express the idea of a power, it was broad enough, in its ordinary acceptation, to cover it, and that the conveyance was intended to include such power. The opinion added that the question of the execution of a power was one of intention, and it then cited the case of Bilderback v. Boyce, supra, as establishing the principle, that "if the devisee of the power intends to execute it, that intention, however manifested, whether directly or indirectly, positively or by just implication, will make the execution valid and operative," although "the intention to execute the power must be apparent and clear, so that the transaction is not fairly susceptible of any other interpretation."

In the present case, the will of Mrs. Clemson recites that she is entitled to legacies under the will of her mother. It refers to bequests left to her for life, with the power of disposition. It thus refers to the power and also to the property which is the subject of the power, namely, the legacies left to her in her mother's will. Furthermore, the statement in the will of Mrs. Clemson that she has full testamentary power to dispose of those legacies is, in view of the fact that the will of her mother does give her the power to dispose of those legacies as she pleases, an express and direct reference to such power, because, under the Constitution and Statute of South Carolina, in force at the time Mrs. Clemson made her will, she could have disposed by will of any other property which she had, without the aid of any special power to do so. Her will then states that she wills, devises and bequeaths to her husband, absolutely and in fee simple, "the entire property and estate to which I am now in any wise entitled, and which I may hereafter acquire, of whatever the same may consist." She does not here say "my property and estate," but the language she uses is adequate to include not only what was her own in fee simple and in full right, but also all that in which she was interested, or over which she had any control. The words "in any wise entitled" are sufficient to cover not only property which she held in her own full right, but also property which she held in a limited right under her mother's will. The word "property" was the very word used by her mother in describing, in her will and codicil, the estate and interest which she had given to Mrs. Clemson. Thus, in clause 20 of the will of Mrs. Calhoun, which gives to Mrs. Clemson for life a share in the residue of the estate, she speaks of "the property" given to Mrs. Clemson in that clause and in the second clause of the will, the latter clause containing only a devise and bequest to Mrs. Clemson for life of certain real estate and personal property. Therefore, Mrs. Clemson, in using the words "the entire property and estate to which I am now in any wise entitled," must be regarded as referring to that in respect to which she had the power of disposition by the will of her mother. Otherwise, we have the case of a reference to legacies left to Mrs. Clemson under her mother's will, and to her power of disposing of them, which is meaningless unless the language of the devise and bequest which follows covers the property in regard to which she had such power of disposition. At the time of her death, in September, 1875, she had received all that she was entitled to receive from the estates of her sister and her brother, and there was nothing then left except the property which had come to her under her mother's will, namely, the interest in the bond and mortgage and the portrait of her grandmother.

The decree of the Circuit Court was right, and it is affirmed.

HENRY W. KINGSBURY, Appt.,

v.

SIMON B. BUCKNER ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 650-688.)

Decree against a minor, how may be attacked—second appeal—or bill of review, effect of—decree absolute—infant, when bound by decree—subsequent suit to set aside decree—service unnecessary on infant defendant in cross-suit, where subject matter is same as in the original suit—who may institute suit in behalf of infant—bond for costs—authority to sue—authority of guardian ad litem—waiver of bond—simulated case—fraud and collusion—Illinois law—competent witness—notice of commission—rehearing.

1. In Illinois, a decree against a minor is subject to attack, by an original bill, upon the ground of error apparent upon the record, want of jurisdiction or fraud.
2. Where a decree of the inferior court was rendered in conformity with the mandate of the Supreme Court of Illinois, it is beyond the control of the latter court when questioned upon a second appeal in the same case.
3. The same principle applies where a party, instead of prosecuting a second appeal, attempts by a bill of review, or by a new bill in the nature of a bill of review, to reach errors apparent upon the face of the record.
4. By the practice in chancery in Illinois, a decree against an infant is absolute in the first instance.
5. Where an infant, by his prochein amy, prosecuted an appeal to the Supreme Court of Illinois from the original decree rendered in a suit brought by him, and appeared by guardian ad litem to an appeal in the cross-suit, he is as much bound by the action of that court, in respect to mere errors of law, not involving jurisdiction, as if he had been an adult when the appeal was taken.
6. In a subsequent suit brought by the infant to set aside such decree and to declare it void as to him, no inquiry can be made in respect to errors of law apparent on the record, that do not involve jurisdiction of the original suit brought by the plaintiff when an infant.
7. Where an infant complainant in an original suit is a defendant in a cross-bill, he is in court, by his original bill, and process is not required upon a cross-bill against him in the same suit, when the matter in respect to which the plaintiffs in the cross-bill sought relief was embraced by the original bill.
8. When the subject matter of the original bill filed by the infant was the title and ownership of property conveyed by a deed, under which the plaintiff claimed title, and the allegations of the cross-bill related to that property and demanded that the trust created by the deed be declared and ownership established under the trust, although the cross-bill alleged additional facts, the subject matter of the cross-bill was germane to that of the original bill.

NOTE.—Bill of review; nature of; when may be brought; who may maintain; time within which to be brought; what it should contain. See note to Bank of U. S. v. Ritchie, 8: 890.

When may be brought, and for what. See note to Shelton v. Van Kleeck, 27: 269.

2. In such case, it was not essential to the jurisdiction of the court that there should have been service of process, actual or constructive, upon the cross-bill against the infant.
10. A cross-bill is proper whenever the defendants, or any or either of them, have equities arising out of the subject matter of the original suit, which entitle them to affirmative relief, which they cannot obtain in that suit.
11. Where the infant is so young as to be incapable of making a selection of a person to represent him, the court, in favor of infants, will permit any person to institute suit in his behalf, exercising, however, discretion to prevent any abuse of that right.
12. The right to bring the suit does not depend upon the execution of a bond for costs, although, according to the letter of the statute, the next friend may be required to give such a bond.
13. It is not necessary to the jurisdiction of the court that the next friend should exhibit with the bill evidence of special authority to bring it as next friend. His own affidavit that he is the next friend of the infant is sufficient.
14. The rule that a next friend or guardian ad litem cannot, by admissions or stipulations, surrender the rights of the infant, does not prevent a guardian ad litem or prochein amy from assenting to such arrangements as will facilitate the determination of the case in which the rights of the infant are involved.
15. A consent by the next friend or guardian ad litem that a case be heard in a particular division of the Supreme Court of Illinois did not prejudice the substantial rights of the infant, although, in the absence of consent, the supreme court, sitting in one division, cannot take cognizance of a case from another division.
16. The waiver by the infant's guardian ad litem and next friend of a bond by the opposite party upon his appeal—the latter having waived an appeal bond on his part—did not affect the jurisdiction of the court.
17. If the original and cross-bills were not a genuine case, but were contrived, and the proceedings were conducted for the purpose of depriving an infant of his estate, without bringing attention to the real merits of his claim to the property in dispute, the decree in such case would not constitute an obstacle in the way of giving relief to the infant.
18. That the attention of the court was not specially called in the former suit to the points now made against the theory of a trust advanced in behalf of the opposite party does not show fraud or collusion. The absence from the opinion of that court of any reference to it does not prove that the guardian ad litem and next friend failed to make the point, or that he purposely avoided allusion to it.
19. By the laws of Illinois in force when the deposition in this case was taken, a husband was competent to testify for or against his wife in cases where the litigation was concerning the separate property of the wife.
20. One was a competent witness, who had no interest adverse to either party, whose interest in the property was recognized by all the parties. The fact that she was a party to the suit did not, of itself, disqualify her as a witness.
21. The statutory provision requiring ten days' notice for the suing out of a commission to take depositions might be waived by the guardian ad litem or next friend without the imputation upon him of fraud or collusion, nor are fraud and collusion to be imputed to him because he did not, after his appointment, file cross-interrogatories, when cross-interrogatories were filed by another party and were of the most searching character.

22. The mere failure of the guardian ad litem and next friend to apply for a rehearing does not raise any presumption of infidelity to his trust. [No. 176.]

Argued Jan. 8, 9, 1890. Decided April 7, 1890.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois dismissing, for want of equity, a suit brought to declare certain proceedings in the courts of Illinois erroneous, fraudulent and void as to plaintiff and to restore certain real estate to him. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Lyman Trumbull and John P. Wilson, for appellant:

A minor may file a bill to impeach a decree procured by fraud, or for error appearing upon the face of the decree.

Lloyd v. Malone, 23 Ill. 43; Kuchenbeiser v. Beckert, 41 Ill. 172; Hess v. Voss, 52 Ill. 478; Lloyd v. Kirkwood, 112 Ill. 829; Story, Eq. Pl. § 427; Gooch v. Green, 102 Ill. 510; Wright v. Miller, 1 Sandf. Ch. 120.

The demurrers admit the fraud, collusion and falsification of the record as charged, and should have been overruled.

The original suit of Henry W. Kingsbury, an infant seven years of age, commenced by Corydon Beckwith, as his next friend, was instituted without authority of said infant, without filing the bond required by the statute, and gave the court no jurisdiction to pass upon his rights.

Rev. Stat. 1845, chap. 47, § 18; Lathers v. Fish, 4 Lans. 213; Gray v. Larrimore, 4 Savvy. 688.

The cross-bill of Buckner and wife was, in fact, an original bill. It was not germane to the original suit, and the circuit court had no jurisdiction of the same without the service of process upon the minor. The appointment of Beckwith guardian ad litem of the minor, who had no notice of the cross-suit, on motion of the complainants therein, was error, and did not give the circuit court jurisdiction to divest the minor of his real estate.

The Supreme Court of Illinois in the Central Grand Division had no jurisdiction of the appeal from the decree of the Circuit Court of Cook County, except by consent of parties.

Neither an infant, nor his guardian ad litem, could by consent confer jurisdiction on a court which would not otherwise have it.

It was not competent for the guardian ad litem to waive the giving of an appeal bond by the cross-complainants on their appeal to the supreme court, and, even if it were in the power of the guardian ad litem to waive it, the supreme court had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal without such bond.

It was error for the guardian ad litem to waive any of the rights of the minor, or to allow the introduction of illegal and incompetent evidence in support of the cross-bill, without objection.

Cartwright v. Wise, 14 Ill. 417; Fischer v. Fischer, 54 Ill. 231.

The testimony of Simon Buckner and Jane C. Kingsbury, parties to the cross-bill, and interested in the result of the suit, and upon which the supreme court based its decision, was incompetent, and it was the duty of the guardian ad litem to have objected to the same.

Laws 1867, 188, § 2; Gross' Stat. 1871, 274; Reeves v. Herr, 59 Ill. 81.

The whole record shows that the rights of the minor were not presented to the court; that the decree against him upon the cross-bill was the result of negligence; that the entire proceedings in both the circuit and supreme courts were a contrived case, carried on by the waiver of the infant's rights, and are not binding upon the infant, because there was no earnest controversy.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit involves the title to real estate of considerable value in the City of Chicago, of the possession of which the appellant, who was the plaintiff below, claims to have been deprived by certain proceedings in the courts of Illinois, to which Simon B. Buckner, his wife and others were parties. The relief sought is a decree declaring those proceedings to have been erroneous, fraudulent and void as to the plaintiff, and adjudging not only that such estate be restored to him, but that Buckner and wife be held as trustees ex maleficio, with liability to account for the income of the property.

The history of the plaintiff's claim to the property, as well as of the proceedings in the state courts, the integrity and legal effect of which are assailed in the present suit, must be given before examining the grounds on which he seeks a reversal of the decree.

Major Julius J. B. Kingsbury, of the United States army, died, intestate, on or about the 25th of June, 1856, seised of lots designated five and six in block thirty-five on the original map of the Town of Chicago, and also of that part of the east half of the northwest quarter of section nine in township thirty-nine north, of range fourteen east of the third principal meridian, which lies east of the North Branch of the Chicago River and south of the center of Ontario Street, in Cook County, excepting, however, a small portion of the last-named tract, previously conveyed by him to Buckner.

The intestate left surviving him his widow, Jane C. Kingsbury, and two children, Mrs. Buckner and Henry W. Kingsbury, the father of the appellant. These children were his only heirs-at-law.

By deed duly executed and acknowledged on the 15th of May, 1861, Buckner and wife, "in consideration of the sum of one dollar, and of the natural love and affection" of the grantors for the grantees, conveyed to Henry W. Kingsbury, the brother of Mrs. Buckner, and, at that time, a lieutenant in the United States army, one undivided half of the above lots five and six, and all their right, title and interest in the "Kingsbury tract," containing thirty-five acres, more or less, being the south half of what then remained of the northwest quarter of section nine, township thirty-nine, range fourteen, in Cook County, after deducting therefrom the Town of Wabansia, to have and to hold the same to the grantee, his heirs and assigns forever, the grantors covenanting that they would warrant the property conveyed. The deed recited that the other undivided half of the land and tenements formerly owned by Major Kingsbury belonged to the grantee as one of his heirs, and that the entire property was subject to the dower rights of his widow.

On the 25th of March, 1862, the plaintiff's father executed an instrument which, upon proof that it was wholly in his handwriting and signed by him, was ordered by the Corporation Court of the City of Alexandria, Virginia, to be recorded as his last will and testament. And under an order of that court, passed May 10, 1870, Ambrose E. Burnside qualified as his executor. On the 11th of July, 1870, that writing, with the proof thereof, was presented by Burnside, as executor, to the County Court of Cook County, Illinois, for record; and by the latter court it was ordered "that the said will and proof thereof, certified as aforesaid, be recorded, and that the same be treated and considered as good and available in law in like manner as wills executed in this State."

The writing referred to is as follows:

"Expecting soon to start upon a military expedition where death may overtake me, I leave this as a record of my wishes respecting the disposition of my property:

"To my mother, Jane C. Kingsbury, I leave twenty thousand dollars, or so much of my Chicago property as upon fair appraisal may be valued at that amount.

"To my sister, Mary J. Buckner, I leave as much of the Chicago property held in my name as shall amount to one third of the property in the City of Chicago, Illinois, held by my father, Julius J. B. Kingsbury, deceased.

"To my cousin, John J. D. Kingsbury, I leave my property at Waterbury, Conn., and in addition thereto five thousand dollars. I trust he will expend it in completing his education.

"The remainder of my property of every description I leave to my devoted wife, Eva. I desire, moreover, that the provisions of this will be so carried out that the yearly income of my wife for her own personal support shall never be less than two thousand dollars.

"As executors I name Ambrose E. Burnside, of Rhode Island, and Capt. John Taylor, Commissary Department, U. S. Army.

"Signed at Fortress Monroe, Va., March 25, 1862.

"Henry W. Kingsbury,
"First Lieutenant 5th Regiment Artillery,
"U. S. Army."

Lieutenant Kingsbury was killed at the battle of Antietam on the 17th of September, 1862.

On the 18th of July, 1870, the plaintiff herein, suing by Corydon Beckwith, his next friend, instituted an action in the Circuit Court of Cook County, sitting in equity, against Simon B. Buckner, Mrs. Buckner, Ambrose E. Burnside, Jane C. Kingsbury, John J. D. Kingsbury, Albert G. Lawrence and Eva Lawrence. The last-named defendant, as Eva Taylor, intermarried with Lieutenant Kingsbury on the 4th of December, 1861. The only child of that marriage was the plaintiff, who was born December 16, 1862, after the death of his father. His mother, subsequently, September 26, 1865, intermarried with Albert G. Lawrence.

deed of May 15, 1861, and that upon his death it passed to the plaintiff, subject only to the dower rights of his mother and grandmother, and to certain incumbrances outstanding against the property or some portions of it; and that by a decree rendered in a suit instituted in 1868 by Jane C. Kingsbury in the same court against Eva Lawrence, Albert G. Lawrence, himself, and one David J. Lake (who assumed to act as the plaintiff's guardian), John Woodbridge was appointed receiver of the entire income of the premises, accruing and to accrue, with power to lease and manage the property under the orders of the court, and with direction to pay out of such income to his grandmother, Jane C. Kingsbury, and to his mother, the sums to which they were respectively entitled; to provide for the maintenance and support of the plaintiff, and to pay the interest upon certain mortgages upon the property, as well as other expenses incident to its care and management.

Referring to the writing executed at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, on the 25th of March, 1862, the bill alleged that it was delivered to John McLean Taylor for safe-keeping; that neither at the time of his death, nor at any time thereafter, was his father an inhabitant or resident of Virginia, nor did he have any property in that State; that the Corporation Court of the City of Alexandria had no jurisdiction to admit said will to probate or record; that neither of the proceedings in that court, nor of those in the County Court of Cook County, Illinois, had Jane C. Kingsbury, Eva Lawrence, John McLean Taylor or himself any notice; that the plaintiff's father did not sign said paper in the presence of any attesting witness, nor was the same attested by any witness in his presence; that it was not executed with the requisite forms and solemnities to make the same available for the granting and conveying of the property therein mentioned, according to the laws of Connecticut, the place of his domicil, or of Maryland, where he died, or of the State in which any of his property was situated; that it was not entitled to probate in Illinois; that, nevertheless, Burnside, combining with the other defendants in that suit, alleged and pretended that it was a valid will for passing the title to property in Illinois, and said Jane C. Kingsbury, Mary J. Buckner, John J. D. Kingsbury and Eva Lawrence, named in said pretended will as devisees or legatees, claim under it, but without right, some interest in the said estate of the plaintiff.

The prayer for relief was that said instrument be declared invalid and of no legal force and effect as a last will and testament; that the proceedings relating to it in the County Court of Cook County be reversed and set aside, or declared to be null and void, as constituting a cloud upon plaintiff's title to the real estate hereinbefore described; that his right and title by inheritance to that estate as the posthumous son and only heir-at-law of the said Henry W. Kingsbury, deceased, be confirmed and established; that in the meantime Burnside, Buckner and wife and John J. D. Kingsbury be enjoined and restrained from intermeddling with the said estate, or with the rents, issues or profits thereof, and from attempting in any way to obstruct or interfere with Woodbridge in the performance of his duties as receiver; and that on the final hearing of the cause the injunction be made perpetual.

On the 31st of October, 1870, Buckner and wife filed their joint and several answer to the bill. Answers were also filed by Jane C. Kingsbury, Burnside and John J. D. Kingsbury, which put in issue all the material allegations of the bill.

Buckner and wife also filed, October 31, 1870, a cross-bill against the plaintiff and their co-defendants, Eva Lawrence, Albert G. Lawrence and Jane C. Kingsbury, which, after setting out all the material averments, both of the bill and of their answer, alleged that the real estate of which Major Kingsbury died seised included all the lands described in the original bill; that while the legal title to the strip along the east branch of the North Branch of the Chicago River, seventy feet in width for the full length of the tract, was vested in Simon B. Buckner by deed of January 22, 1855, he had no beneficial interest therein, and Major Kingsbury was at his death its real owner; that the title to the real estate of which the latter died seised descended to and vested in Mrs. Buckner and her brother, subject to the widow's right of dower and to the incumbrances thereon; that the defendants were married when Major Kingsbury died, and in 1858 had issue to their marriage, a daughter, who was then living, by reason whereof defendant Simon B. Buckner became vested with a life estate as tenant by the curtesy initiate in the property vested in his wife; and that at the death of her father he, the defendant Buckner, had the full control and management of the real estate left by him, and retained such control until it was placed under the management of Ambrose E. Burnside some time in December, 1860.

In respect to the deed of May 15, 1861, by Buckner and wife to Lieutenant Kingsbury, the cross-bill showed that the value of the property covered by it was five hundred thousand dollars, and, except an undivided half of certain real estate of small value in Connecticut, was the only property held by Mrs. Buckner, her brother being the owner of the other undivided half of the property described in that deed; that said deed was executed without the knowledge of the grantee, who was ignorant of its existence until several weeks after its execution, when he was informed of the facts in the premises; that it was sent by Buckner to his agent in Chicago with directions to file it for record, which was done on the 17th of May, 1861, and that constituted the only delivery of it ever made to the grantee; and that it was made without any consideration, contract, arrangement, bargain or promise whatever, and was not acknowledged in accordance with the laws of Illinois.

The cross-bill also alleged that the sole purpose of the deed of 1861 was to vest the title of the property thereby conveyed in the grantee, as naked trustee, and not to make to him a gift; that it was the intention of the cross-plaintiff Simon B. Buckner to waive all claim to it, to allow his wife the sole use and enjoyment thereof, and to place the control of it in her own family, but he claimed all his legal and equitable rights in the premises, and asked that the trust be enforced so as to enable him to carry his intention into effect, to which end he would assent to any decree conferring the sole control and benefit of the property upon his wife, her heirs and assigns; that in the month of December, 1860, the deceased and Simon B. Buckner for themselves, Jane C. Kingsbury and Mrs. Buckner, made an arrangement with Ambrose E. Burnside, then residing in Chicago, to take charge of and manage the property for all the parties; and that Lieutenant Kingsbury never exercised any acts of ownership over, or asserted any interest in, the property inconsistent with said trust, and, if he had lived, would have recognized the equitable and just claim of the cross-plaintiffs, and reconveyed the same upon request.

The cross-bill then referred to the will of March 25, 1862, and alleged that the only property in Chicago vested in the testator at that date was the real estate left by his father, which descended to him and his sister, Mrs. Buckner, and that the only conveyance ever made to him of property in that city, and the only property there held in his name for the use of any person, was that described in the deed of Buckner and wife of May 15, 1861; that prior to the making of that will the Chicago property had been used solely to receive the rents and profits, the testator, his mother and sister being treated as if each had been entitled to one third; that the testator, who was only twenty-three years of age, recently from West Point, without business experience, and unacquainted with the rules of law, and acting under the impression that Mrs. Buckner was the owner of only one third, made the provision in his will for Mrs. Buckner, with the purpose to declare said trust, and to restore to the control of his sister all the property described in the above deed; that therefore the will is a sufficient declaration in writing of the trust to take it out of the Statute of Frauds, if it was a trust within its provisions; and that said will was legally admitted to probate by the laws of Virginia, by a court having jurisdiction in such matters, and was certified and admitted to record in Illinois in conformity with its laws.

It further alleged: "And your orators further show that the said Henry W. Kingsbury, on the 23d day of October, 1861, wrote with his own hand a letter to his mother, Jane C. Kingsbury, and signed the same by his signature 'Henry,' in which, among other things, he wrote: 'I spent all the morning with Burnside, yesterday. He stated, as I told you, that Simon had made over all the Chicago property that was held in his name to me. A new power of attorney is therefore necessary from you and myself. We made one out. I signed it. Burnside will send it to you.' And they aver that the reference in said letter by the words 'as I told you' was to a conversation between the said Henry W. Kingsbury and his mother, had in their last personal interview before the date of said letter, in which the said Henry W. Kingsbury expressly admitted that he held all the property of your orator, Mary K. Buckner, inherited from her father, in trust for a short time, and said that he would restore it all to her whenever she desired. And your orators show that the only delivery of said deed bearing date May 15, 1861, ever made, was the filing of the same for record by the said Simon B. Buckner, as hereinbefore set forth."

The relief asked in the cross-bill was: that the deed of May 15, 1861, be declared null and void as to Mrs. Buckner; that it be declared a deed of trust to the father of the plaintiff for the use and benefit of the grantors or one of them; that the plaintiff be adjudged to hold the property described in it as a trustee in like manner, and required to reconvey to the cross-plaintiffs or to one of them, as may be determined by the court; that an account be taken of the receipts and disbursements from and about the property by the defendants; that the dower rights of Jane C. Kingsbury and Eva Lawrence be ascertained and fixed, and partition made of said real estate, and the property owned by the cross-plaintiffs restored to them as they might be severally entitled thereto; and that they have such other and further relief as was just and equitable.

By an order made November 25, 1870, Corydon Beckwith—no service of process having been made upon the infant—was appointed guardian ad litem for Henry W. Kingsbury on the cross-bill. The infant, by him, filed an answer, which distinctly put in issue the material allegations of the cross-bill, and restated substantially all that was set out in the original bill. Answers to the cross-bill were also filed by Lawrence and wife. To these answers replications were filed by Buckner and wife.

On the 31st of December, 1870, the cause being heard, it was adjudged that both the original and cross suits be dismissed without prejudice. It was further ordered that the decree be entered as of the 24th of December, 1870. At the same time there was filed in the cause a certificate of all the evidence used on the final hearing in the circuit court.

Each party prosecuted an appeal. The case was heard in the Supreme Court of the State at its January Term, 1871, and, on the 5th of October, 1871, that court reversed the decree of the circuit court and remanded the cause with special directions as to the decree to be entered, and for further proceedings. Kingsbury v. Burnside, 58 Ill. 310, 337. The following extract from the opinion of the court shows the grounds as well as the extent of the reversal:

"The late Henry W. Kingsbury was, as this case shows, not only a trustee of the property for his sister, but he was an honest trustee. By the last act of his life, in this respect, he designed to, and did, admit the existence of the trust, and endeavored to execute it. Immediately after his death, his widow, one of the defendants, in a letter to the mother of her deceased husband, recognized and admitted the trust, so far as she was concerned, in the most express terms, and seemed distressed at the suggestion of any obstacle to its immediate execution. Though her relations in life, and to the cestui que trust, became afterwards changed by another marriage, yet it is incredible that if she has been cognizant of the efforts which have been made to conceal the most important item of evidence of her former husband's relation to this vast property, and to wrest it from its proper channel, she can view them otherwise than with feelings of sorrow and regret. Her conduct has been the subject of severe criticism by counsel, but we are inclined to believe that she, like the unconscious infant whose name appears as plaintiff in the original bill, is but the involuntary instrument in the hands of designing men, who stand in no such relation to the memory of the deceased trustee as does Eva Lawrence.

"The trust being sufficiently manifested and proved by writings, signed by the party who was, by law, enabled to declare it, it must be executed.

"This conclusion renders unnecessary any discussion of the question, made by appellants in the cross-bill, as to the sufficiency of the acknowledgment of the deed by Mary J. Buckner, or of the question made by appellant in the original bill as to the execution and probate of the will; because, if properly executed and admitted to probate the will would be governed by the laws of this State, where the property is situated; and the posthumous birth of the infant Henry W. Kingsbury would, by those laws, operate as an abatement of all devises of property so situated. Gross' Statutes, p. 800, sec. 16, Wills. Besides, the testator was incapable of divesting the property, held in his name, for the use of Mary J. Buckner, by any devise he could make.

"The decree of the court below, dismissing both bills without prejudice, must therefore be reversed and the causes remanded, with directions to that court to dismiss the original bill absolutely, and to grant the relief prayed in the cross-bill, by a decree establishing the equitable title in Mary J. Buckner, to her proper share of the real estate described in the deed of May 15, 1861, declaring the trust, and requiring the proper conveyance of the legal title to her, divested of any life estate in her husband (he having renounced the same), and of all right of dower in Eva Lawrence; that an account be taken between said Mary J. Buckner and all other parties interested in the estate of Julius J. B. Kingsbury, deceased, according to the rules and practice of the court of chancery in such cases, and it be decreed accordingly."

The cause was redocketed in the Circuit Court of Cook County, and on the 18th of November, 1871, in pursuance of the special directions of the Supreme Court of Illinois in its mandate and opinion, the original bill was dismissed for want of equity. It was also ordered and adjudged, pursuant to such mandate and opinion, that the master in chancery make, execute, acknowledge and deliver a deed conveying, for Henry W. Kingsbury, the infant defendant to the cross-bill, to Mrs. Buckner, the real estate and premises conveyed by the deed of May 15, 1861, divested of any life estate in her husband.

It was further ordered and adjudged, that partition be made between Henry W. Kingsbury and Mrs. Buckner, as tenants in common of the real estate inherited from Major Kingsbury (one undivided half of which was owned by each), the share of the lots or lands assigned to the former to be subject to the dower rights of Jane C. Kingsbury and Eva Lawrence, and the share assigned to Mrs. Buckner to be subject to the dower rights of Jane C. Kingsbury. It was further adjudged that Eva Lawrence be enjoined from asserting any claim for dower in the property assigned to Mrs. Buckner. The accounting between the parties to the cross-bill, and the costs, and the question in regard to the dower of Mrs. Kingsbury, were reserved for the further order of the court.

The commissioners appointed to make partition made their report on the 22d of January, 1872, and the same was confirmed, February 12, 1872, except as to that part of the premises known as the Spencer tract, in respect to which objections had been filed in behalf of Kingsbury by his guardian ad litem. Under writs of assistance issued in favor of Mrs. Buckner on the 29th of January, 1872, she was placed in possession of the property assigned and confirmed to her. On the 26th of March, 1872, the court sustained a motion for leave to the receiver to pay Mrs. Buckner one half of all moneys collected by him on policies of insurance. From that order the infant, by his guardian ad litem, prayed and was allowed an appeal to the Supreme Court of the State. It is stated that the exceptions filed for the infant to the reports were overruled on the 2d of August, 1872, and a decree entered confirming those parts of them to which exception had been taken, and declaring the parties vested with the title to the lands respectively set off and allotted to them. And from that decree the infant, by his guardian ad litem, prayed and was allowed an appeal.

The case was again carried to the Supreme Court of the State upon the infant's appeal, by his then guardian ad litem (a new one having been appointed), who assigned numerous errors in that court, among which were the following: that the court erred in rendering the decree of November 18, 1871; that it was rendered without proof against the infant, and was contrary to law, and that it was not in accordance with the mandate of the court, and was without jurisdiction in the Cook Circuit Court. The remaining assignments related, principally, to alleged errors in reference to the partition, the report of the commissioners, the distribution of insurance money and the apportionment of the incumbrances. Upon the hearing of this last appeal, the solicitor representing the infant and his guardian ad litem urged numerous objections to the proceedings in the circuit court, among which were these: that the circuit court had no jurisdiction over the infant to render the decree of November 18, 1871, on the cross-bill of Buckner and wife; and that such decree was rendered without sufficient proof, was collusively obtained against the infant, and was manifestly unjust. In connection with these general objections the solicitor of the infant presented many specifications of fraud alleged to have been practiced by the former guardian ad litem of the infant in and about the proceedings culminating in the decree of November 18, 1871. Most of these specifications are again presented in the present suit, and will be hereafter examined.

At the September Term, 1872, of the Supreme Court of Illinois, the last decree was reversed mainly upon the ground that Mrs. Buckner had no interest in what was called the "Spencer tract." Kingsbury v. Buckner, 70 Ill. 514. In reference to the attempt made upon that appeal to re-open the questions decided on the first appeal, the court said:

"A labored argument has been made to prove the error of the former decision of the court, and it is charged that fraud and collusion were practiced, and incompetent testimony adduced, to obtain it. If this were true, we cannot determine questions so grave upon ex parte affidavits. If there have been fraud and collusion, the proper remedy would be in chancery, and then the parties assailed could have an opportunity of making a defense; or, if the decree is directed by the court of final resort, by an application for a rehearing.

"Upon the former hearing, after full argument, this court decided that Henry W. Kingsbury held the property conveyed by the deed from Mrs. Buckner and husband to him, as trustee; that the trust had been manifested by a writing, and that she had an equitable title to a share in the estate. The cause was remanded to ascertain her share, and not to determine the trust. The latter had been established by the declaration of this court. This appeal is prosecuted from the decree making partition, and can bring before us no other question, except questions incident to the order for partition. We cannot examine as to the merits of the original case, but only as to proceedings subsequent to the decision at the former hearing. . . . The trust relation between the parties was established by the former decision, and the court has not the power to reverse it."

A rehearing was granted, and at the September Term, 1873, of the Supreme Court of the State, the following opinion was delivered:

"PER CURIAM: A rehearing was ordered in this cause upon the present appeal, not for the purpose of reconsidering the case upon the merits, or to change, or, in any substantial sense, to modify our former decision, but to render the opinion of the court more explicit, and prevent misconception of its meaning. This seems demanded by the peculiar state of the record, which was inadvertently overlooked, and the language employed in the opinion, to which our attention has been called by the application for a rehearing.

mer occasion, the principal questions involved were definitely settled. The decree of the court below, dismissing both the original and cross bills, was reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to grant the relief prayed by Mrs. Buckner's cross-bill. 58 Ill. 810. In pursuance of those directions, a decree was entered in the circuit court, November 18, 1871. This decree established the principal rights of the parties, and the court proceeded to carry them into effect, which involved the necessity of entering three subsequent decretal orders, and on August 2, 1872, another and final decree. This decree disposed of a controversy arising between the parties upon proceedings for partition, involving a claim by Mrs. Buckner to a share in what is called the 'Spencer tract,' as a part of her father's estate, and by that decree her claim was allowed, from which an appeal was taken on behalf of the infant, Henry W. Kingsbury, to this court. No appeal was taken from the decree of November 18, 1871, but appeals were taken from some of the decretal orders intervening that and the final decree of August 2, 1872.

"Upon these appeals the whole record was brought to this court, and errors assigned, questioning the propriety of the decree of November 18, 1871, entered in conformity with the directions of this court, some of the intervening orders, and the final decree of August 2, 1872. The questions raised and attempted to be raised were all carefully considered, and the conclusion arrived at was, that no error could be assigned upon the first decree, entered in pursuance of the directions of this court; that the points made upon the intervening orders were not well taken, but that the decree of August 2, 1872, was erroneous and ought to be reversed, for the reasons given in the opinion. These views, however, are not clearly announced in the former opinion, and it follows also that the directions contained in the opinion which have no relation to the matters involved in the decree of August 2, 1872, are wholly inappropriate, and may be considered as withdrawn from the opinion.

"The judgment which we intended to enter was, that the several decrees and decretal orders antecedent to the final decree of August 2, 1872, and upon which error was assigned, be affirmed, but that the decree of August 2, 1872, concerning Mrs. Buckner's claim in the Spencer tract, be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in conformity with the former opinion, as herein explained and modified, and that each party pay half of the costs in this court."

It should be here stated that the present transcript does not contain the decree of August 2, 1872.

On the 7th of March, 1877, the death of Mrs. Buckner was suggested in the circuit court, and her daughter, Lily Buckner, was substituted in her place as a co-complainant in the cross-bill, and on the same day a decree was rendered in conformity with the opinion and judgment of the Supreme Court of the State, annulling so much of the deed executed by the master to Mrs. Buckner as conveyed to her one undivided half of the Spencer tract, and directing a conveyance of that tract to the infant, Henry W. Kingsbury.

The present suit was brought in the Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois, on the 11th day of August, 1878, for Henry W. Kingsbury, by Eva Lawrence, his next friend, against Simon B. Buckner, Mrs. Buckner, Jane C. Kingsbury, John J. D. Kingsbury, Ambrose E. Burnside and Corydon Beckwith. As already stated, its object was to obtain a decree declaring the proceedings, above referred to, to be erroneous, fraudulent and void as to him, and restoring him to the possession and ownership of the property embraced by the deed executed May 15, 1861, by Buckner and wife to his father. The bill is lengthy, setting forth substantially all the above steps in the suit in the state courts and going very much into detail in respect to the various grounds upon which he bases his claim to relief.

Shortly after this bill was filed, Beckwith, Buckner and wife and Burnside filed general demurrers. But no further steps were taken in the cause until April 16, 1877, when it was dismissed for want of prosecution. The order of dismissal was, however, set aside, and Buckner and Burnside, having obtained leave to withdraw their demurrers, filed May 17, 1877 (Mrs. Buckner having died), a plea in bar, based upon the bill, cross-bill, pleadings, proceedings and decrees in the former case. They also filed a joint and several answer. The cause was removed upon the petition of the plaintiff to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, where, upon final hearing, and after replications were filed, in behalf of the infant, to both the plea and the answer of Buckner and wife, the suit was ordered to be abated as to Mrs. Buckner, the demurrers of Beckwith and Mrs. Kingsbury were sustained and the bill dismissed for want of equity. This is the decree which has been brought here for review.

The first proposition advanced by appellant is, that a decree against a minor is subject to attack, by an original bill, upon the ground of error apparent upon the record, want of jurisdiction or fraud. Such is the rule in Illinois, in one of whose courts this suit originated, and by one of whose courts the decree sought to be set aside was rendered. Lloyd v. Malone, 28 Ill. 43; Kuchenbeiser v. Beckert, 41 Ill. 172, 177; Hess v. Voss, 52 Ill. 472, 478; Kingsbury v. Buckner, 70 Ill. 514, 516; Lloyd v. Kirkwood, 112 Ill. 329, 337. In the case last cited, the Supreme Court of Illinois, after observing that there was considerable diversity of opinion as to whether a decree could be assailed by original bill for error merely, said: "In many of the States, however, including our own, a decree against an infant, like that against an adult, is absolute in the first instance, subject to the right to attack it by original bill, for either fraud or error merely; but, until so attacked, and set aside or reversed, on error or appeal, it is binding to the same extent as any other decree or judgment. This right to attack a decree by original bill may be exercised at any time before the infant attains his majority, or at any time afterwards within the period in which he may, under the statute, prosecute a writ of error for the reversal of such decree."

Although the cases in Illinois concede the right, by original bill, to impeach a decree for fraud, and although this court has recognized that right as existing even after the decree has been affirmed by an appellate court (Pacific R. Co. of Mo. v. Ketchum, 101 U. S. 289, 296 [25: 932]; Pacific R. of Mo. v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 111 U. S. 505, 519 [28: 498, 503]), none of the cases cited from either court sustain the proposition that a party, whether an infant or adult, against whom a decree is rendered by direction of the appellate court, can impeach it, by bill filed in the court of first instance, for errors apparent on the record, and which do not involve the jurisdiction of either court.

The decree which the appellant seeks to have set aside was rendered in conformity with the mandate of the Supreme Court of Illinois, requiring that the original bill in the first suit be dismissed and that a decree be entered upon the cross-bill, adjudging the property in question to belong to Mrs. Buckner, and not to him. It is the one which the Supreme Court of the State held, in Kingsbury v. Buckner, 70 Ill. 516, 517, was beyond even its own control when questioned upon a second appeal in the same case. And this is in accordance with the settled doctrines of this court. In Roberts v. Cooper, 61 U. S. 20 How. 467, 481 [15: 969] (cited in 70 Ill. 517), this court said: "It has been settled by the decisions of this court, that after a case has been brought here and decided, and a mandate issued to the court below, if a second writ of error is sued out, it brings up for revision nothing but the proceedings subsequent to the mandate. None of the questions which were before the court on the first writ of error can be reheard or examined upon the second. To allow a second writ of error or appeal to a court of last resort on the same questions which were open to dispute on the first, would lead to endless litigation." So, in Durant v. Essex Co., 101 U. S. 555, 556 [25: 961], it is said: "On a mandate from this court affirming a decree, the circuit court can only record our order and proceed with the execution of its own decree as affirmed. It has no power to rescind or modify what we have established.

The result of the appeal to us was an affirmance of what had been done below. After the appeal had been taken, the power of the court below over its own decree was gone. All it could do after that was to obey our mandate when it was sent down. We affirmed its decree and ordered execution. We might have ordered a modification so as to declare that the dismissal should be without prejudice. We did not do so. The circuit court had no power after that to do what we might have done and did not do." See also Browder v. McArthur, 20 U. S. 7 Wheat. 58 [5: 397]; Tyler v. Maguire, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 253, 284 [21: 576, 584]; The Lady Pike, 96 U. S. 461, 462 [24: 672]; Stewart v. Salomon, 97 U. S. 361 [24: 1044]; Humphrey v. Baker, 103 U. S. 736, 737 [26: 456]. It is obvious that the same principle must apply where a party, instead of prosecuting a second appeal, attempts by a bill of review, or by a new bill in the nature of a bill of review, to reach errors apparent upon the face of the record. In Southard v. Russell, 57 U. S. 16 How. 547, 570 [14: 1052, 1053]—cited with approval in Kingsbury v. Buckner, 70 Ill. 514, 516—it was said: "As already stated, the decree sought to be set aside by this bill of review in the court below was entered in pursuance of the mandate of this court, on an appeal in the original suit. It is therefore the decree of this court, and not that primarily entered by the court below, that is sought to be interfered with. The better opinion is, that a bill of review will not lie at all for errors of law alleged on the face of the decree, after the judgment of the appellate court. These may be corrected by a direct application to that court, which would amend, as matter of course, any error of the kind that might have occurred in entering the decree. Nor will a bill of review lie in the case of newly-discovered evidence after the publication, or decree below, where a decision has taken place on an appeal, unless the right is reserved in the decree of the appellate court, or permission be given on an application to that court directly for the purpose. This appears to be the practice of the Court of Chancery and House of Lords, in England, and we think it founded in principles essential to the proper administration of the law, and to a reasonable termination of litigation between parties in chancery suits."

Among the cases cited in Southard v. Russell was that of Brewer v. Bowman, 8 J. J. Marsh. 492, in which the court, after observing that the remedy by bill of review for errors apparent upon the record was analogous to that of a writ of error, said: "Hence, an affirmance in this court upon writ of error would bar a bill of review for any error which might exist in the record, but which was not assigned nor inquired into by this court. It follows that a reversal by this court, upon a writ of error (and we perceive no reason why a reversal upon an appeal should not have the same effect) with direction how to render the decree, and the rendition of the decree by the circuit court in pursuance of the mandate of this, would equally bar an attempt by bill of review to inquire into errors which lie on the record, but which were not noticed by this court. . . . The decree rendered by the circuit court conformed to the opinion of this court. All attempts, therefore, to reach any error apparent upon the face of the record, prior to the decision of this court, come too late." See also United States v. Knight, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 488, 489 [17: 80]; Kimberly v. Arms, 40 Fed. Rep. 548; Story, Eq. Pl. § 408; Cleveland v. Quilty, 128 Mass. 579; McCall v. Graham, 1 Hen. & Mun. 13; Campbell v. Price, 3 Munf. 228; Campbell v. Campbell, 22 Gratt. 674; Jewett v. Dringer, 31 J. N. Eq. 586, 590; Rice v. Carey, 4 Ga. 558, 570; Watkins v. Lavton, 69 Ga. 672, 675; Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 490; 2 Barb. Ch. Pr. (2d Rev. ed.) 92.

It has been suggested that the rule is different in the case of infants, and that the right of the infant Kingsbury to file an original bill to set aside the decree of November 18, 1861, for errors apparent on the record, was not affected by the fact that such decree was entered pursuant to the mandate of the Supreme Court of Illinois. In this view we do not concur. By the practice in chancery in Illinois, a decree against an infant is absolute in the first instance, and no day is given to show cause after he becomes of age; and instead thereof the infant Kingsbury had five years after reaching full age within which to prosecute an appeal from the decree of December 31, 1870, dismissing his bill in the original suit. Rev. Stat. Ill. 1845, p. 421, § 53; Rev. Stat. 1874, p. 785; Enos v. Capps, 15 Ill. 277; Barnes v. Hazleton, 50 Ill. 429, 432; Wadhams v. Gay, 78 Ill. 424; Hess v. Voss, 52 Ill. 472; Lloyd v. Kirkwood, 112 Ill. 837. But action in his behalf need not have been deferred for so long a time. It was competent for him during his minority, by his prochein amy, to carry that decree to the highest court of the State for re-examination, or file in the court rendering it an original bill to have it set aside for error apparent on the record. In McClay v. Norris, 9 Ill. 370, 383, the court, after observing that whatever may have been the practice elsewhere the right of an infant to prosecute a writ of error was not to be doubted in Illinois, said: "If an infant sues out a writ of error, and a decree in this court is passed against him, such decree would be conclusive as well against him as it would have been had he attained full age, both under the provisions of the statute before recited and upon the principle that he is a plaintiff in error, and, as such, concluded by the judgment or decree." And in Kuchenbeter v. Beckert, 41 Ill. 172, 177, it was said: "It was urged that the trial was had and the decree executed and carried into effect so long since that it should not now be disturbed. This would be unquestionably true, had the parties all been adults when the decree was rendered or had the period elapsed which bars a writ of error after the minor becomes of age. But under our practice a minor defendant to a bill is entitled to his day in court, whether it is expressly reserved by the decree or not, and he may at any time during his minority, by his next friend or guardian, file an original bill to impeach a decree against him." Lloyd v. Malone, 23 Ill. 43; Lloyd v. Kirkwood, ubi supra; Richmond v. Tayleur, 1 P. Wms. 734; Chambers on the Property of Infants, 798. [The infant, by his prochein amy, having prosecuted an appeal to the Supreme Court of Illinois from the original decree rendered in the suit brought by him, and having appeared by guardian ad litem to the appeal of Buckner and wife, is as much bound by the action of that court, in respect to mere errors of law, not involving jurisdiction, as if he had been an adult when the appeal was taken.] In Gregory v. Molencorth, 8 Atk. 626, Lord Hardwicke said that "it is right to follow the rule of law, where it is held an infant is as much bound by a judgment in his own action, as if of full age; and this is general, unless gross laches, or fraud and collusion appear in the prochein amy, then the infant might open it by a new bill." So in Lord Brook v. Lord Hertford, 2 P. Wms. 518, 519: "An infant, when plaintiff, is as much bound and as little privileged as one of full age." See also Brown v. Armistead, 6 Rand. 594; Jame-son v. Moseley, 4 T. B. Mon. 414; Hanna v. Spotts, 5 B. Mon. 362.

It results that no inquiry can be made in this case in respect to errors of law apparent on the record, that do not involve jurisdiction of the original suit brought by the plaintiff when an infant.

But it is contended that the record shows upon its face a want of jurisdiction of the person of the infant and of the subject matter at the time the decree of November 18, 1871, was rendered. In McDermid v. Russell, 41 Ill. 489, 491, it was decided that when notice by publication against infant nonresident defendants in chancery was nugatory and void, the appointment of guardians ad litem for them, based upon such publication, "was also void, for they were not in court, amenable to any of its orders." To the same effect is Campbell v. Campbell, 68 Ill. 463, in which the court declared the 47th section of the old Chancery Statute of Illinois (Rev. Stat. Ill. 1845, chap. 21), so far as it authorized a decree against infant defendants, without service of process on them, to be unconstitutional. In Chambers v. Jones, 72 Ill. 275, 278, where the appearance of an infant defendant was entered by a guardian ad litem, appointed by the court to defend for her, it was said: "This did not give the court jurisdiction, and hence the whole proceedings were coram non judice. It is very clear no title passed to Jones by his purchase under the decree. The decree and sale were absolutely null and void, and could be attacked directly or collaterally by the heirs owning the fee. The court had no jurisdiction to pronounce a decree that would affect their interests, having no jurisdiction of their persons by service of process or otherwise." Upon the authority of these cases it is insisted that, as there was no service of process, actual or constructive, upon the infant Kingsbury, in the cross-suit of Buckner and wife, he was not in court in respect to the matters of that cross-suit, and consequently the decree against him on the cross-bill was void; and that if he could not be brought into the court of original jurisdiction on the cross-bill merely by the appearance of his guardian ad litem, he was not before the Supreme Court of Illinois upon the appeal prosecuted in his name. The defendants insist, upon the authority of cases in this court, that no question can be raised as to the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Cook County to pass the decree entered in conformity with the mandate of the Supreme Court of the State. Skellern v. May, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 267 [3: 220]; McCormick v. Sullivant, 28 U. S. 10 Wheat. 192 [6: 800]; Ex parte Sory, 87 U. S. 12 Pet. 389 [9: 1108]; Washington Bridge Co. v. Stewart, 44 U. S. 8 How. 418 [11: 658]; Des Moines Nav. R. Co. v. Iowa Homestead Co. 128 U. S. 552, 557 [31: 202]. But those were not cases in which the party against whom a decree was rendered was not before the court. They do not sustain the proposition that a decree, entered in pursuance of the mandate of an appellate court, but which is void by reason of the party not being before that court, or before the court of original jurisdiction, may not be attacked by an original bill. It is therefore necessary to inquire whether the Circuit Court of Cook County had jurisdiction of the infant Kingsbury upon the cross-bill filed by Buckner and wife.

In respect to the plaintiff's contention that he could not have been brought into court as a defendant in the cross-suit, except by summons or publication upon the cross-bill, it may be said that in Ballance v. Underhill, 4 Ill. 453, 461, decided in 1842, it was held that the defendant in a cross-suit must be brought into court in the same manner as he would be in any other case. But in Fleeco v. Russell, 18 Ill. 82, the court, referring to the provisions of the Revised Statutes of 1845 (chap. 21, §§ 24 to 30 inclusive), relating to cross-bills, said: "Under these provisions of the statute, which have been passed since the decision in the case of Ballance v. Underhill, 4 Ill. 453, no process is necessary to bring in the parties to the original bill; but the cross-bill is to be regarded as an adjunct or part of the original suit, and the whole together as constituting but one case." The same principle was announced in Reed v. Kemp, 16 Ill. 445, 448. We are not referred to any case holding this principle to be inapplicable in the case of an infant complainant in an original suit, who is a defendant in a cross-bill. He is in court, by his original bill, and process is not required upon a cross-bill against him in the same suit. See also 1 Starr & Curtis' Ann. Stat. 408, §§ 80 to 85 inclusive; Public Laws Ill. 1871-72, p. 829.

But it is said that the subject matter of the original bill was simply the claim alleged to be asserted, in hostility to the plaintiff, under the will of his father, and that Mrs. Buckner's claim that the property conveyed by the deed of May 15, 1861, was held in trust for her, could not properly be made the subject of a cross-suit; that the jurisdiction, if any, acquired over the infant by the filing of the original bill did not extend to the new matter thus introduced by the cross-bill; and that therefore he was not before the court as to such new matter, by the appearance in his behalf of a guardian ad litem, without previous service of process, actual or constructive. This view cannot be sustained, for it is clear that the matter in respect to which the plaintiffs in the cross-bill sought relief was embraced by the original bill. The original bill asserted ownership by appellant, subject to certain incumbrances and rights of dower, of the entire real estate standing in his father's name at the time of his death, including that which Buckner and wife conveyed by the deed of May 15, 1861. It made distinct reference to that deed as the source of his father's title to the property here in question, and therefore as the foundation of his own claim; and the relief asked was not restricted to a decree simply declaring the alleged will of 1862 to be invalid.

But a decree was sought by which his right and title to the property claimed to be held in trust for Mrs. Buckner by her brother should be confirmed and established, and all the defendants, including her, perpetually enjoined from intermeddling with it, or with its rents, issues or profits. The subject matter of the original bill, so far as she was concerned, was the title and ownership of the property conveyed by the deed of May 15, 1861. The plaintiff claimed title under that deed, and by inheritance from his father. Mrs. Buckner claimed it under the same deed, but she averred that it was a trust deed. The allegations of the cross-bill related to that property, and, in answer to the plaintiff's demand that his title to it be confirmed, she demanded that the trust created by the deed of 1861 be declared, and her ownership established as against the plaintiff. It is true that the cross-bill alleged additional facts, but its subject matter was not the less, for that reason, germane to that of the original bill. Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 889, 892; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 1548; Underhill v. Van Cortlandt, 3 Johns. Ch. 339, 355; Hurd v. Case, 83 Ill. 45, 49.

In Jones v. Smith, 14 Ill. 229, the relief sought was a decree establishing the plaintiff's title to certain real estate purchased at an execution sale under various judgments, and which had been conveyed by the judgment debtor to his daughter. The debtor defended upon the ground that the judgments were fraudulently obtained, and that of such fraud the purchaser was cognizant when they were rendered. He filed a cross-bill to have the sales set aside, and satisfaction of the judgments entered. Upon the question whether a cross-bill was proper in such a case, the court said: "A cross-bill is proper whenever the defendants, or any or either of them, have equities arising out of the subject matter of the original suit, which entitle them to affirmative relief, which they cannot obtain in that suit. No fitter case could be imagined for a cross-bill than the one which is presented by these pleadings. . . . No doubt upon his answer, he [the defendant] was at liberty to prove the facts averred, but this would only defeat Smith's [the plaintiff's] claim to relief, while the same facts if established upon a cross-bill would entitle him to have satisfaction of the judgments actually entered; without this he might be put to the necessity of proving them repeatedly." In Lloyd v. Kirkwood, 113 Ill. 329, 336, in which the relief sought was a decree of partition, it was said that if the defendant, as a matter of law, was entitled to have the decree upon which the plaintiffs based their right to partition set aside, on a bill for that purpose, such right was an appropriate matter for a cross-bill to an original bill filed to enforce such partition. So, in the case before us, while Mrs. Buckner might, perhaps, have defeated the plaintiff's suit by proving, under her answer, the facts set out in the cross-bill, it was competent for her, in the same suit, to obtain such affirmative relief as was appropriate under proof that her brother did not become the absolute owner of the property by the conveyance of 1861, but was invested with the title in trust for her. It results that it was not essential to the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Cook County that there should have been service of process, actual or constructive, upon the cross-bill of Buckner and wife against the infant.

The jurisdiction of that court to entertain the original suit instituted July 18, 1870, is questioned upon the ground that it was commenced without authority of the infant, and because no bond for costs was filed by the guardian ad litem. This position is supposed to be justified by the following provisions of the Revised Statutes of Illinois: "Suits in chancery may be commenced and prosecuted by infants, either by guardian or next friend." Rev. Stat. 1845, chap. 21, § 4, title Chancery. "Minors may bring suits in all cases whatever, by any person that they may select as their next friend; and the person so selected shall file bond with the clerk of the circuit court, or justice of the peace before whom the suit may be brought, acknowledging himself bound for all the costs that may accrue and legally devolve upon such minor. And after bond shall have been so filed, said suit shall progress to final judgment and execution, as in other cases." Rev. Stat. 1845, chap. 47, § 18, title Guardian and Ward. Surely, these provisions are not to be interpreted to mean that no suit in the name of an infant, by next friend, can be entertained, unless such next friend is selected by the infant. Such a construction is inadmissible. It would prevent a suit being brought by next friend, where the infant was so young as to be incapable of making a selection of a person to represent him. The section first above quoted is only a recognition of the general rule that "the court, in favor of infants, will permit any person to institute suits in their behalf," exercising, however, a "very large discretion on the one hand, in order to facilitate the proper exercise of the right which is given to all persons to file a bill on behalf of infants, and on the other, to prevent any abuse of that right and any wanton expense to the prejudice of infants." 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 69, 71; Starten v. Bartholomew, 6 Beav. 144; Macpherson on the Law of Infants, 864; Chambers on the Property of Infants, 757. In any view, the right to bring the suit does not depend upon the execution of a bond for costs, although, according to the letter of the statute, the next friend may be required to give such a bond before the suit proceeds to final judgment and execution. It is also said that there is nothing to show that Beckwith had any authority to sue as next friend, except that in his affidavit to the original bill he states that he is the next friend of the infant. It was not necessary to the jurisdiction of the court that he should exhibit with the bill evidence of special authority to bring it as next friend. It was in the power of the court, under whose eye he acted, at any time to inquire into his fitness to represent the interests of the infant, to remove him if he was a mere intermeddler, and to allow someone else to be substituted in his place. All the circumstances show that his institution of the original suit as next friend was with the knowledge and assent of the infant's mother and guardian. It is impossible to believe that he moved in the matter without the approval of those nearest to the infant. There is no ground to say that he proceeded without authority.

There is still another question of jurisdiction to be considered. By the Constitution of Illinois "appeals and writs of error may be taken to the supreme court held in the grand division in which the case is decided, or, by consent of the parties, to any other grand division." Ill. Const. 1870, art. 6, §§ 2, 5, 8. The County of Cook is in the Northern Grand Division, and, unless the parties consent, cases from that county, which may be taken to the supreme court, must go to the court sitting in that grand division. The record discloses the fact that upon the entry, in the Circuit Court of Cook County, of the decree of December, 1870, dismissing both the original and cross bills without prejudice, an order was made showing that the plaintiff by his next friend, Beckwith, prayed and was allowed an appeal to the supreme court, a bond, upon his part, being waived by the other parties; that the plaintiffs in the cross-bill prayed and were allowed an appeal, a bond on their part being waived; and that the parties, in open court, agreed that "such appeals may be prosecuted to and the record filed in the Central Grand Division at the next term, and that one record may be used for both appeals." Now, it is contended that the Supreme Court of the State, sitting in the Central Grand Division, could not, except by consent, entertain jurisdiction of those appeals, and that the next friend and guardian ad litem was incapable, in law, of giving such consent. It is undoubtedly the rule in Illinois, as elsewhere, that a next friend or guardian ad litem cannot, by admissions or stipulations, surrender the rights of the infant. The court, whose duty it is to protect the interests of the infant, should see to it that they are not bargained away by those assuming, or appointed, to represent him. But this rule does not prevent a guardian ad litem or prochein amy from assenting to such arrangements as will facilitate the determination of the case in which the rights of the infant are involved. There is but one Supreme Court of Illinois, although for the convenience of litigants it sits in different places in that State, and, unless the consent of parties is given, can take cognizance, when holding its session in a particular grand division, only of cases arising in such division. But it is the same court that sits in the respective divisions, and a consent by the next friend or guardian ad litem that a case be heard in a particular division could not possibly prejudice the substantial rights of the infant. It is true that the consent of the plaintiff's next friend and guardian ad litem, that the case should go to the Central Grand Division, brought it to a more speedy hearing than it would otherwise have had, if such consent had not been given. But certainly it was not to the interest of the plaintiff that the final determination of his case should be delayed. The cases cited by counsel—Owens v. McKee, 10 Ill. 79; Gosforth v. Adams, 11 Ill. 52, and People v. Vermilion County, 40 Ill. 125—do not establish any different principle. They decide nothing more than that, in the absence of consent, the supreme court, sitting in one grand division, cannot take cognizance of a case from another grand division.

It is further contended that the Supreme Court of Illinois could not entertain the appeal from the decree dismissing the cross-bill of Buckner and wife without an appeal bond being executed by them, and that it was not competent for Beckwith to waive the giving of such bond. In support of this position counsel cite Chicago, P. & S. W. R. Co. v. Marcellus, 104 Ill. 91, and Lewis v. Shear, 98 Ill. 121. In the first of those cases the party appealing had not filed a transcript of the record in the supreme court within the required time, nor taken any steps whatever to bring the case before the court for consideration. A motion to dismiss the appeal having been made, it was held that a mere waiver by the appellee of an appeal bond did not operate to perfect the appeal for any purpose. The court said: "There is no appeal here for us to act upon—nothing to dismiss. The case will be stricken from the docket." In the other case cited, which was an action of replevin, the question was whether the record showed the requisite amount involved to give the supreme court jurisdiction. As it did not, the appeal was dismissed, the court observing that it could not take jurisdiction of a case from the appellate court unless the record showed, in some manner, that it was one of which it could take cognizance. Neither case is an authority for the proposition that an appeal bond is essential to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the State where the appeal is allowed and a transcript of the record is filed in due time. A mere failure to execute the bond within due time may be ground for dismissing an appeal, but does not deprive the court of the right to proceed to a determination of the appeal. So here, the waiver by the infant's guardian ad litem and next friend of a bond by Buckner and wife upon their appeal—the latter having waived an appeal bond on his part—did not affect the jurisdiction of the court. And such is the rule of practice in the Supreme Court of the United States. Edmonson v. Bloomshire, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 806, 811 [19: 91]; Richardson v. Green, 180 U. S. 104, 114 [32: 872, 874]; Evans v. State Nat. Bank, 184 U. S. 880 [38: 917]. The cases cited by counsel from the latter court do not announce any different rule.

We come to consider whether the record discloses any ground for holding that the decree of November 13, 1871, was obtained by fraud, as distinguished from mere error, or by collusion with the guardian ad litem. In considering this question we have not overlooked the fact that there were replications in the present suit to both the plea and the answer of Buckner and wife, although the final decree below inadvertently states that no replication to the answer was filed. The general contention, in behalf of the plaintiff, is that the original and cross bills were not a genuine case, but were contrived, and the proceedings in the state court were conducted throughout, for the purpose of depriving an infant of his estate, without bringing attention to the real merits of his claim to the property in dispute. Of course, if the record disclosed a case of that character, the decree complained of would not constitute an obstacle in the way of giving relief to the plaintiff. What are the grounds upon which the charge of fraud and collusion is based?

It may be observed that no claim is made of newly discovered evidence, and that all the facts now relied upon to show fraud and collusion were disclosed by the record before the Supreme Court of the State, upon the first appeal, when the merits of Mrs. Buckner's claim to the property were examined. No effort has been made to prove any state of case different from that disclosed in the original and cross suit. The issue as to fraud must be determined entirely by the record of the proceedings in the state court, and by such inferences as may be justly drawn therefrom; for no evidence, apart from that record, was introduced.

It is said that the intention of the court was not specially called to the various points now made against the theory of a trust advanced in behalf of Mrs. Buckner. That fact, if established, would not necessarily show fraud or collusion. But it does not appear what points were made in argument upon the first appeal to the Supreme Court of the State. Certainly, the errors assigned by the next friend in behalf of the infant were broad enough to cover every objection now raised against the right of Mrs. Buckner to the property. Those errors were, the dismissal of the original bill, the refusal to grant the relief asked by the plaintiff and the admission of incompetent evidence against him. Under such an assignment of errors, it was competent for the prochein amy to contend, as one of the plaintiff's counsel insists he should have contended, that "the object of making the deed of May 15, 1861, was to leave the Buckners free to take sides in the civil war against the United States without jeopardizing this large estate in the City of Chicago;" and that a party making a deed for such a purpose was in no better position, in a court of equity, than one who makes a deed to defraud his creditors. For aught appearing in the record, this view was pressed upon the Supreme Court of the State. The absence from the opinion of that court of any reference to it does not prove that the guardian ad litem and next friend failed to make the point, or that he purposely avoided allusion to it. If, in considering so grave a charge as that of fraud, we should indulge in conjecture as to what controlled the mind of the state court, the inference might be fairly drawn that, as this point arose out of the evidence, it was passed without notice, because the court regarded it as not sustained by the proof, or as one that ought not to control the decision of the case.

The depositions of Simon B. Buckner and Jane C. Kingsbury were taken in the suit brought by the infant in 1870, upon interrogatories by the plaintiffs in the cross-suit, and cross-interrogatories by Mr. Lawrence. It is contended that these persons were incompetent, by the laws of Illinois, to testify in support of the cross-bill, and that the guardian ad litem failed to object upon that ground to their depositions. This charge of collusion fails altogether if they were not incompetent as witnesses. By the first section of a Statute of Illinois, passed February 19, 1867, and which was in force when their depositions were taken, it was provided that "no person shall be disqualified as a witness in any civil action, suit or proceeding," except in certain specified cases, "by reason of his or her interest in the event thereof, as a party or otherwise, or by reason of his or her conviction of any crime, but such interest or conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting the credibility of such witness." The second section provides that "no party to any civil action, suit or proceeding, or person directly interested in the event thereof, shall be allowed to testify therein of his own motion, or in his own behalf, by virtue of the foregoing section, when any adverse party sues or defends as . . . heir . . . of any deceased person, . . . unless when called as a witness by such adverse party so suing or defending," except in certain cases that have no application here. The fifth section of the same Act provides that "no husband or wife shall, by virtue of section one of this Act, be rendered competent to testify for or against each other, . . . except in cases where the wife would, if unmarried, be plaintiff or defendant, . . . and except, also, in cases where the litigation shall be concerning the separate property of the wife; . . . in all which cases the husband and wife may testify for or against each other, in the same manner as other parties may under the provisions of this Act." Pub. Laws Ill. 1867, p. 188.

It is clear from these statutory provisions that Buckner was not incompetent, by reason of his relation of husband, to testify in support of his wife's claim to the property, because if Mrs. Buckner had been unmarried she would have been a defendant in the original suit, and the plaintiff in the cross-suit, and also because that suit concerned her separate property. In the cross-bill he joined with his wife in asking that the trust intended to be created by the deed of 1861 be enforced, and gave his assent to any decree that would place the property under her sole control and preserve it for her benefit. This was regarded by the Supreme Court of the State as a renunciation by him of even a life estate, and the decree of 1871 proceeded upon that ground. Nor was he incompetent by reason of the inhibition contained in the second section of the Act, because, although a formal party to the cross-suit, he was not directly interested in the event thereof, and was not, in the sense of the Statute, a party adverse to the heir of his deceased brother-in-law. The only party adverse to the heir, in respect to the issues made by the cross-suit, was Mrs. Buckner. She could not have testified on her own motion, or in her own behalf, unless called by the opposite party. But, looking at the policy and language of those enactments, we perceive no reason why Buckner was not competent as a witness, in support of his wife's suit, under the first section of the Act. We are also of opinion that Mrs. Kingsbury was a competent witness. She had no interest adverse either to appellant or to Mrs. Buckner. Her interest in the property was recognized by all the parties. No decree could have affected her rights. The fact that she was a party to the suit did not, of itself, disqualify her as a witness.

There are other facts in connection with the depositions of Buckner and Mrs. Kingsbury, which are relied upon to establish the charge of fraud and collusion upon the part of the guardian ad litem. They are these: He was not appointed guardian ad litem in the cross-suit until November 25, 1870, and yet he appears from the record to have assumed the position of guardian ad litem before that date, by assenting in writing, under date of November 22, 1870, that a dedimus potestatem might be sued out, on the 30th of November, to take the deposition of Buckner, thereby waiving the benefit of a notice of ten days given by the statute in such cases; and he failed to file cross-interrogatories to Buckner and Mrs. Kingsbury. These facts contain nothing of substance, when taken in connection with other circumstances. It may be that he did not, in fact, sign the above writing until after his appointment as guardian ad litem, and that he signed it without observing its date. Be that as it may, five days intervened between his appointment as guardian ad litem and the time named for suing out the commission to take Buckner's deposition. The statutory provision requiring ten days' notice for the suing out of a commission to take depositions is one for the benefit of the party against whom the depositions are to be read, and might be waived. The waiver of full notice, in respect to Buckner's deposition, was first signed by the attorney of Lawrence and wife, the latter being the mother and guardian of the infant. It was equally competent for the guardian ad litem or next friend to join in the waiver, unless it be assumed, as we are unwilling to do, that his fidelity is to be measured by his capacity and willingness to delay litigation, when there is nothing to be thereby accomplished. Nor are fraud and collusion to be imputed to Beckwith because he did not, after his appointment by the court, file cross-interrogatories to Buckner and Mrs. Kingsbury. Cross-interrogatories were filed by his partner in behalf of Mrs. Lawrence, and were of the most searching character. They were prefaced with formal objections, upon the ground of immateriality and incompetency, to more than twenty of the interrogatories relating to the deed of May 15, 1861, to the circumstances under which it was executed, and to the alleged trust in favor of Mrs. Buckner. And, at the hearing, objections were made to the competency of the evidence contained in the depositions for the cross-plaintiffs, but the depositions were received subject to all legal objections upon the ground of sufficiency, competency and relevancy. There is no suggestion that the cross-interrogatories which were filed did not cover the whole ground of dispute between the parties. It would have served no good purpose for the guardian ad litem to repeat them on behalf of the infant, for Mrs. Buckner was bound to support her claim by proof; and without filing cross-interrogatories the infant was entitled to avail himself of every fact to his advantage brought out by the cross-interrogatories upon the part of his mother.

Another badge of fraud is supposed to be found in the fact that the decree dismissing the bill and cross-bill, without prejudice, was, in fact, rendered December 31, 1870, and yet was entered as of December 24, 1870, without objection from the guardian ad litem. We assume that the object of all this was to enable the parties to get the case before the supreme court at its session commencing in January, 1871, and have it there determined at an early day. There is nothing in all this to show fraud or collusion. Of course, the guardian ad litem, by technical objections, could have postponed the hearing of the case in that court until September, 1871; but there is no circumstance disclosed by the record tending in any degree to show that the infant would have profited by such delay.

But it is said that the failure of the guardian ad litem to apply for a rehearing of the original appeal is evidence of bad faith upon his part. We cannot assent to any such view of his duty. The opinion of the state court shows that the legal questions presented by the appeal were carefully considered, and there is no ground to suppose that its conclusion would have been modified if a rehearing had been granted. Be this as it may, we cannot agree that the mere failure of the guardian ad litem and next friend to apply for a rehearing raised any presumption of infidelity to his trust.

Some stress is laid upon the fact that Beckwith met this suit by demurrers to the bill, and did not file an answer. This does not show fraud or collusion. There was no need of making him a defendant. No relief was prayed against him. He was neither a necessary nor proper party to the relief asked. If he preferred to terminate the suit as to himself by a demurrer, it was his privilege to pursue that course.

In respect to the charge that the case was presented to the Supreme Court of the State upon a falsified or changed record, it is only necessary to say that there is no foundation for it in the record before us.

Without noticing other matters discussed by counsel, which we do not deem of importance, we are of opinion that the plaintiff has failed to show that the decree of November 13, 1871, or any decree subsequent to that date, was, in any degree, the result of fraud or collusion.

The decree is affirmed.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

v.

SAMUEL W. LITTLE ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 645-650.)

Construction of a will—disregard by state court of opinion of this court—federal question—review of state judgments.

1. The question of the true construction of a will depends wholly upon general rules of law and upon the local statutes, and in no degree upon the Constitution, laws or treaties of the United States.
2. The disregard by the state court of the opinion of this court, upon the question in a former suit, does not give this court jurisdiction to review the judgment of the state court in this case.
3. If the state court had refused to give due effect to a final judgment of any court of the United States in a case between the same parties, a federal question would have been presented, which might have been brought to this court for review.
4. In order to give this court jurisdiction to review a judgment of a state court against a title or right set up or claimed under a statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, that title or right must be one of the plaintiff in error, and not of a third person only.

Argued March 17, 1890. Decided April 7, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Nebraska to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court for Lancaster County in that State in an action for the construction of a will and to cancel certain deeds and to quiet plaintiffs' title. Dismissed.

This case was removed into the circuit court of the United States, which entered a decree for the defendants. On appeal to this court, that decree was reversed and the case ordered to be remanded to the state court. 118 U. S. 596 [30: 269].

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was a petition to quiet title, filed January 27, 1883, in the District Court for Lancaster County in the State of Nebraska, by Little and more than seventy others against Giles, Burr and Wheeler, and the children of Jacob Dawson.

The petition alleged that Jacob Dawson on June 15, 1869, being seized of certain described real estate in that county, made his last will as follows:

"After all my lawful debts are paid and discharged, the residue of my real and personal property I bequeath and dispose of as follows, to wit: To my beloved wife, Edith J. Dawson, I give and bequeath all my real estate and personal of which I may die seized, the same to remain and to be hers, with full power, right and authority to dispose of same as to her shall seem meet and proper, so long as she remains my widow, upon the express condition that if she shall marry again then it is my will that all of the estate here bequeathed, or whatever may remain, shall go to my surviving children, share and share alike; and in case any of my children shall have deceased, leaving issue, then the issue so left shall receive the share to which said child would be entitled. I likewise constitute and appoint my said wife, Edith J., to be executrix of my last will and testament."

The petition further alleged that Jacob Dawson died a week afterwards, and his will was duly admitted to probate, and letters testamentary were issued to Mrs. Dawson; that in order to pay his debts and maintain herself and children, and to make advances to the oldest son, she was obliged to sell a large portion of the real estate, and accordingly, under the power conferred on her by the will, executed warranty deeds thereof, under which the plaintiffs severally became seized of certain lots described; that on November 15, 1879, she married again; that the defendants conspired together to cloud the plaintiffs' title and to extort money from them, and, in pursuance of the conspiracy, procured deeds of the whole land to be executed by Dawson's children to Burr and Wheeler, and by them to Giles, a citizen of Iowa, for nominal considerations, and to enable suits to be brought in the courts of the United States; and pretended that Mrs. Dawson took by the will an estate for life only, terminable by her marriage; and commenced vexatious suits, and threatened to commence others, against the plaintiffs.

The petition prayed for an injunction, a canceling of the deeds to Burr and Wheeler and to Giles, a decree quieting the plaintiffs' title and establishing it against all the defendants, and for further relief.

Burr and Wheeler and some of Dawson's children disclaimed all interest in the property; the other children and Giles filed an answer, denying the allegations of the petition, and alleging that the title had vested in Giles; and Giles filed a petition for the removal of the case into the circuit court of the United States, upon the ground that he was a citizen of Iowa and the plaintiffs citizens of Nebraska and other States, and that the controversies between him and each of the plaintiffs were severable.

The case was thereupon removed into the circuit court of the United States; and that court denied a motion to remand it to the state court, and afterwards, upon a hearing on pleadings and proofs, entered a decree for the defendants. On appeal to this court that decree was reversed, and the case ordered to be remanded to the state court, upon the ground that the controversies between Giles and the plaintiffs were not severable, and that the deed to Giles was collusively made for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to the courts of the United States. 118 U. S. 596 [30: 269]. On February 28, 1887, pursuant to the mandate of this court, the circuit court ordered the case to be remanded to the state court.

The defendants then, by leave of that court, filed an amended and supplemental answer, alleging, among other things, the following:

First. A decision of this court on appeal in an action brought in the circuit court of NOTE.—As to interpretation of wills; intention of testator to govern,—see note to Pray v. Belt, 7: 309.

the United States by Giles against Little, holding that by the terms of the will Mrs. Dawson took only an estate for life, determinable upon her marriage, and no power to convey any greater estate than she had herself.

Second. Judgments recovered in the circuit court of the United States on July 8, 1887, against some of these plaintiffs in actions of ejectment brought January 5, 1887, against them by one Miles, to whom Giles in December, 1886, had executed a warranty deed of some of the lots.

A general replication was filed, and a trial was had before the court without a jury, at which, among other things, the defendants put in evidence records of the judgments recovered by Miles against some of these plaintiffs in the circuit court of the United States; and also a record of the proceedings in the action brought in that court by Giles against Little, by which that action appeared to have been an action of ejectment brought August 28, 1880, for the lot now claimed by Little, in which the circuit court sustained a demurrer to the petition and rendered judgment for the defendant, according to the opinion of the circuit judge, reported in 2 McCrary, 871; its judgment was reversed by this court on writ of error on December 12, 1881, and the case remanded for further proceedings; and after further proceedings, the petition, on December 9, 1885, was dismissed, on motion of Giles, without prejudice to a subsequent action.

The report of that case in this court in 104 U. S. 291 [26: 745], was also offered in evidence by the defendants at the trial of the present case, and excluded.

The state court held that by the will of Jacob Dawson Mrs. Dawson took a title in fee simple so long as she should remain his widow, with full power to sell and convey the same in fee during widowhood; and entered judgment for the plaintiffs in accordance with the prayer of their petition. That judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court of Nebraska. 25 Neb. 818.

The defendants sued out this writ of error, and assigned for error that the state courts did not give full faith and credit to the judgments recovered by Miles against some of the plaintiffs in the circuit court, and disregarded the decision of this court in 104 U. S. 291 [26: 745].

Mr. J. M. Woolworth for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. T. M. Marquett, N. S. Harwood and John H. Ames for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

The real question in controversy between the parties is of the extent of the estate and power which Mrs. Dawson took under the will of her husband. In Giles v. Little, 104 U. S. 291 [26: 745], this court held that she took only an estate for life, determinable by her marrying again, and no power to convey a greater estate than she had herself. In the case at bar, the Supreme Court of Nebraska, declining to follow that decision, and basing its judgment largely upon the statutes of the State, held that she took an estate in fee determinable upon her marriage, with power during her widowhood at her discretion to convey in fee any part of the land, and that the devise over in case of her marrying again passed to the children only what remained unconveyed. Little v. Giles, 25 Neb. 818.

The question of the true construction of the will in this respect depends wholly upon general rules of law and upon the local statutes, and in no degree upon the Constitution, laws or treaties of the United States; and the disregard by the state court of the opinion of this court upon the question in a former suit does not give this court jurisdiction to review the judgment of the state court in this case. Leather Manufacturers Bank v. Cooper, 120 U. S. 778 [80: 816]; San Francisco v. Scott, 111 U. S. 768 [28: 598]; San Francisco v. Itell, 133 U. S. 65 [33: 570].

If the state court had refused to give due effect to a final judgment of any court of the United States in a case between the same parties, a federal question would have been presented, which might have been brought to this court for review. Dupasseur v. Rochereau, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 180 [22: 588]; Crescent City Live Stock Co. v. Butchers Union Slaughter-House Co. 120 U. S. 141 [80: 614]. But this record presents no such state of things.

The case of Giles v. Little, 104 U. S. 291 [26: 745], was indeed between one of the present defendants and one of the present plaintiffs, and concerned the title to a lot of land now claimed by the latter; but the judgment of this court only reversed a judgment of the circuit court of the United States sustaining a demurrer to the petition, and remanded the case to that court for further proceedings, and (as appears by the record given in evidence at the trial of the case at bar) the petition was afterwards, and before final judgment, dismissed on the motion of the plaintiff, without prejudice to a new action; so that nothing was finally adjudged in that case, even as between the parties to it. Bucher v. Cheahire R. Co. 125 U. S. 555, 578, 579 [31: 795, 797].

The ground most relied on in favor of a reversal of the judgment of the state court is its refusal to give effect to the judgments obtained in the circuit court of the United States against some of the present plaintiffs by Miles, a grantee of the present defendants. It is argued that the judgments in favor of Miles conclusively showed that some of these plaintiffs had no title, and that, as all these plaintiffs claimed under one title in the present suit, the judgment below in their favor must be reversed as to all of them.

As the present defendants did not claim under Miles, and were not parties to his suits, it is difficult to see how judgments in those suits could have any effect as evidence for or against them, by way of estoppel or otherwise.

But it is certain that they neither had nor claimed any interest in the title acquired by Miles under those judgments. It is well settled that, in order to give this court jurisdiction to review a judgment of a state court against a title or right set up or claimed under a statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, that title or right must be one of the plaintiff in error, and not of a third person only. Owings v. Norwood, 9 U. S. 5 Cranch, 844 [8: 120]; Montgomery v. Hernandez, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 129, 133 [6: 575, 577]; Henderson v. Tennessee, 51 U. S. 10 How. 311 [18: 484]; Hale v. Gainey, 68 U. S. 23 How. 144, 160 [16: 264, 269]; Long v. Converse, 91 U. S. 105 [23: 238]. The title set up by the defendants being that of a third person, in which they have no interest, the writ of error is dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

THE BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF THE COUNTY OF LEAVENWORTH, Appt.,

v.

THE CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

Forfeiture of consolidation of railroad companies, may be enforced by the State, but not by a private person—certified copy of agreement of consolidation, when conclusive evidence—consolidation of certain railroad companies valid—appeal, or bill of review, proper remedy for error—collusion between companies, or fraud, not shown—omission to make defense—laches.

1. Under the Missouri Act of 1870 authorizing the consolidation of two or more railroad companies, the filing with the secretary of state of a resolution accepting the provisions of the Act, passed by a majority vote of the stockholders of each consolidating company, is a matter between the State and the corporations; the State may enforce the forfeiture if the consolidation is void for failure to file such acceptance, but a private person cannot.
2. A certified copy from the secretary of state's office of the agreement for consolidation is conclusive evidence of the consummation of the consolidation in suits between the consolidated company and individuals or other corporations.
3. The consolidation of August, 1871, between the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company and the Atchison Branch of the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company was valid, and the corporation thus formed succeeded to the rights, property and obligations of the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company, created by the consolidation of September, 1868, of the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company chartered in Iowa and a company also of the same name chartered in Missouri; and it was the proper party to be sued and to represent all the interests of all the stockholders in all the corporations of which it was composed.

4. Where a court has jurisdiction of the case and of the parties and of the subject matter, for any mere error in its decision the proper remedy is by appeal, or by bill of review in the same court.

5. The facts that some of the trustees in a deed of trust or mortgage given by a railroad company were directors or stockholders in a railroad company which procured the foreclosure of the mortgage, and that one person was the president of both companies, and that a majority of the directors of both companies were the same persons, and that a majority of the stock of the mortgagor company was in the hands of the president of the other company, and that the attorney who appeared for the mortgagor company had previously been employed by the other company, and the attorneys who brought the foreclosure suit were afterwards attorneys of the latter company, and one of the attorneys of that company, in the foreclosure suit, was a director in the mortgagor company, are not sufficient, in the absence of actual fraud, to render the foreclosure void.

6. Where the proper place to have made a defense was in the foreclosure suit and ample opportunity was had there for such defense, the court in a suit afterwards brought to declare the foreclosure sale void is not bound to give effect to such defense.

7. Courts of equity do not sit to restore opportunities or renew possibilities which have been permitted to pass by the neglect, the ignorance or even the want of means of those to whom they were once presented.

Argued April 3, 1890. Decided April 14, 1890.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri dismissing a suit to set aside a consolidation between railroad companies and proceedings for foreclosure of a trust deed or mortgage and also the sale as fraudulent and void. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

If the court has no jurisdiction to inquire into the regularity of the proceedings by which the consolidation was made the complainant's bill must be regarded as a bill of review.

This suit was not brought in the forum in which the original decree was involved. Some parties to the decree are not parties to the bill; it makes no allegations of specific frauds, and contains no explanations of the delay which preceded its filing.

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

The bill in this case was filed in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri, on the 25th of September, 1883, by The Board of County Commissioners of the County of Leavenworth, a municipal corporation of the State of Kansas, on behalf of itself and of all other stockholders of The Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company, chartered in Missouri, against The Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company, an Illinois corporation, The Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company in Iowa, The Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company (consolidated), The Iowa Southern and Missouri Northern Railroad Company, the last-named three companies being Iowa corporations, The Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company, a Missouri corporation, David Dows and Frederick S. Winston, citizens of New York, and Calvin F. Burnes, a citizen of Missouri. The plaintiff sues as the owner of $800,000 out of $8,000,000 of the capital stock of The Platte City and Fort Des Moines Railroad Company, a Missouri corporation, which stock it originally subscribed for and paid for at par. The circuit court, held by Mr. Justice Miller, on a final hearing on pleadings and proofs, dismissed the bill (25 Fed. Rep. 219), and the plaintiff has appealed.

The following are the material facts of the case, in the view we take of it, substantially as they are set forth in the opinion of Mr. Justice Miller, delivered in the circuit court: The Platte City and Fort Des Moines Railroad Company was created for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad to commence at a point on the Missouri River opposite or nearly opposite the City of Leavenworth, Kansas, and run thence northeasterly to a point on the state line between Missouri and Iowa in the direction of Fort Des Moines. The name of the company was afterwards lawfully changed to the Leavenworth and Des Moines Railway Company and later to the Chicago and Southwestern Railroad Company. Such changes, however, were merely of name and without prejudice to the rights of stockholders in such original company. This company was also authorized by law to build a branch road from some point on the main line to a point on the north line of Missouri in the direction of Ottumwa, Iowa.

On the 12th of May, 1869, a corporation was duly formed under the general laws of Iowa and called the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company in Iowa, for the purpose of building and operating a railroad from Washington, in Iowa, southwesterly, to meet the road of said Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company, chartered in Missouri, at the state line between Iowa and Missouri. The capital stock of this Iowa corporation was fixed in the articles of incorporation at $8,000,000, and it was provided in said articles "that in the event of the consolidation of this corporation with the Chicago and Southwestern Railway in Missouri, the company in which the two companies may be consolidated shall have the power to subject the said corporation to such amount of indebtedness or liability as the board of directors may deem necessary, not exceeding, however, six million of dollars."

On the 25th of September, 1869, these two companies adopted articles of consolidation and became one company under the name The Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company, for the purpose of building a railroad from some point on the Washington branch of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad, in the State of Iowa, to the Missouri River, in the State of Missouri, at a point on the Missouri River opposite or nearly opposite the City of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas. In the proceedings which resulted in this act of consolidation the County of Leavenworth, as one of the stockholders in the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company of Missouri, was represented by its duly appointed agent, who gave his assent to the consolidation.

On the 1st of October, 1869, six days after this consolidation, the new company entered into a contract with the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company, whereby it agreed to issue its bonds to the amount of $5,000,000, payable thirty years after date, bearing interest at the rate of seven per cent per annum, for which coupons were to be attached to the bonds, the whole to be secured by a mortgage on its entire line of road to the Missouri River.

In consideration that the proceeds of those bonds should be placed in the hands of the Rock Island Company, and certain advantages be secured to that Company by the contract, in the way of connection and running arrangements between the two companies and their roads, the Rock Island Company agreed to indorse those bonds, and out of the proceeds of their sale to pay the interest on all of them, until the new road was constructed and turned over to the Southwestern Company.

In pursuance of this agreement the Southwestern Company issued its bonds to the amount of $5,000,000, and placed them in the possession of the Rock Island Company; and on the 6th of October, 1869, made and delivered to the defendants Dows, Winston and Burnes a deed of trust upon their entire line of road from the Missouri River, in Missouri, to a point on the Washington Branch of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad in Iowa, to secure the payment of the bonds and interest, as agreed. The Rock Island Company indorsed the bonds and sold them in open market, or paid them, with its guaranty on them, to the contractors who built the road.

On the 16th of August, 1871, articles of consolidation were signed between the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company of the States of Missouri and Iowa and another company organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, by the name of the Atchison Branch of the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company, which was authorized to construct a road from a point on the east bank of the Missouri River opposite the City of Atchison, in the State of Kansas, by the most practicable route, to a junction with the Chicago and Southwestern Railway. These articles of consolidation were duly filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Missouri according to the law of that State. The validity of that consolidation is assailed by the plaintiff on the ground that it is void by reason of a failure to conform to the laws of Missouri.

The original bill prays for the appointment of a receiver to take possession of the railroad operated by the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company extending from Washington in Iowa to the Missouri River, and for a decree declaring the articles of consolidation between the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company, chartered in Missouri, and the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company in Iowa, to be void; that those companies and the stockholders of each be remitted to their rights as existing before such attempted consolidation; that the $5,000,000 of bonds and their coupons, and the trust deed securing them, be decreed to be void as a lien upon the road; that the trust deed be canceled by the trustees, as a cloud upon the title; that all payments of interest made on those bonds by the Rock Island Company or for such consolidated company, on any account whatever, be adjudged to have been voluntary and unauthorized; that it be declared that no right of action ever existed for the reimbursement thereof; that the proceedings for the foreclosure, hereinafter mentioned, of the trust deed, be decreed to have been and to be collusive, fictitious and fraudulent; that the decree therein, the sale thereunder, the personal judgment against the consolidated company and all other proceedings had under such decree be held to be fraudulent and void; that the organization of the Iowa Southern and Missouri Northern Railroad Company, hereinafter mentioned, the consolidation of the last-named company with the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company and all acts done by either in execution or confirmation thereof, be adjudged to be void; that an accounting be had between the plaintiff and the Southwestern Railway Company, chartered in Missouri, on the one part, and the other defendants charged as trustees, on the other part, as to all proceedings had by either, involving the receipt or lawful disbursement of money, in which the plaintiff or the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company, chartered in Missouri, had or have any interest, as well as for the use and occupation of the road and franchises of the latter company; that the true balance be ascertained, and the parties from whom and to whom payable; that, if the balance should be found due to the plaintiff or to the latter company, a decree be given for its recovery against the party indebted, and, if the balance be found against the plaintiff or that company, the plaintiff or it be decreed to pay the same, which the plaintiff offers to do; that the line of railroad running from the Missouri River, opposite or nearly opposite the City of Leavenworth, in Kansas, by way of Cameron, to the state line between Iowa and Missouri, be decreed to belong to the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company, chartered in Missouri; that the same be delivered up to that company, free and discharged of all liens; and that that company and the plaintiff be re-established in all the rights, properties and franchises of that line of railroad; and for general relief.

The Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company answered the bill, and Dows and Winston, trustees, also answered it, those answers being filed on the 5th of March, 1888. On the 30th of March, 1888, the plaintiff filed exceptions to the first answer, and on the 2d of April, 1888, exceptions to the second answer. These exceptions were heard by the court, held by Judges McCrary and Krekel, and were overruled. The opinion of the court, delivered by Judge McCrary, is reported in 18 Fed. Rep. 209. The conclusion of the court was, that the articles of consolidation between the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company in Missouri and the Iowa corporation of the same name, having been entered into on the 25th of September, 1869, and the bill not having been filed until the 25th of September, 1882, and a case of concealed fraud not being shown, the defenses of laches and of a bar under the Statute of Limitations of Missouri, set up in the answers, must be sustained.

On the 16th of February, 1884, the plaintiff filed an amended bill, with substantially the same prayers as those of the original bill.

To resume the history of the road, it was completed after several years, and the money with which this was done was mainly raised by the sale of the bonds of the Southwestern Company, indorsed by the Rock Island Company, and the Rock Island Company paid the interest on the bonds, as it had assumed to do. The possession of the road, as it became fit for use, was taken by the Rock Island Company, so that, when it was completed from one end to the other, it was in the possession and use of that Company and so remained for two or three years afterwards. The Rock Island Company says, in its answer, that it paid the interest on the bonds out of the sale of the bonds themselves, according to the contract, until the road was finished, and after that paid it out of its own money, by reason of its obligation as guarantor or indorser of the bonds. After interest had thus accrued and been paid in this latter mode to the amount of $1,000,000, according to its statement, it made application to the trustees in the deed of trust for a foreclosure under the provisions of that deed, on account of the default of the Southwestern Company in paying such interest. The trustees accordingly brought such a suit in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa, where a decree was rendered. A sale of the Southwestern Road was made to a corporation organized under the laws of Iowa for its purchase. Under that sale a deed was made to that company by the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company, by order of the court, and the deed and sale were confirmed. To that suit of foreclosure the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company and the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company and others were made defendants, and the two companies appeared by counsel.

After the second consolidation, in which the Atchison branch came into the Southwestern Company, that company issued bonds to raise money for the construction of this Atchison branch, and a mortgage or deed of trust was made to secure the payment of those bonds, which was a first mortgage on the Atchison branch and a second mortgage on the remainder of the consolidated company's road. The trustees in that mortgage were made defendants in the foreclosure suit, and the holders of the bonds so secured were afterwards, on motion, admitted to defend for their interest in the suit.

After the sale of the road under the decree, and its purchase by the new organization, which was called the Iowa Southern and Missouri Northern Railroad Company, that company entered into a consolidation with the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Company, which consolidation included other roads, or pieces of roads, built under the auspices of the Rock Island Company, all of which were now consolidated under the name of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company, which is the principal defendant in this suit.

This suit of the County of Leavenworth is founded on the proposition that the attempted consolidation of the Chicago and Southwestern Company with the Atchison Branch Company is utterly void, and that, as the real Southwestern Company, which issued the bonds and made the mortgage on which the foreclosure suit and sale were based, was never served with process or appeared in that suit, that decree and foreclosure sale are also void. As the real Southwestern Company, which gave this mortgage, refuses to take any steps to assert its rights, the County of Leavenworth, as one of its stockholders, comes forward, on behalf of itself and other stockholders, to do so, and prays that the decree and sale under the proceedings in the Iowa circuit court be set aside and held for naught, as well as the pretended second consolidation. Should this second consolidation be held valid, then it asks that the sale of the road under that decree, and the decree itself, be set aside and held for naught, on the ground of fraud and abuse of trust by the Rock Island Company.

The first question considered by the circuit court was, whether the consolidation with the Atchison branch was so void that no company formed by such consolidation had an existence making it capable of doing any business, and especially of being a defendant in the suit to foreclose the mortgage for $5,000,000. The court said: "It is obvious that if this second consolidated company was not the legal owner of the Chicago and Southwestern Railroad, and was not liable for the bonds and mortgage, then no company was before the court which foreclosed that mortgage, which had any interest in the road, or was under any obligation to defend the suit. As we have already stated that the first consolidated company was not before that court at all, nor represented in the proceedings, except as it was a part of the second consolidated company, it would therefore follow that the foreclosure proceedings are void as to the real Chicago and Southwestern Company; the sale of its road is void, and the consolidation with the Chicago and Rock Island, as transferring the ownership of that road, is ineffectual; and the real Southwestern Company, under the first consolidation, is still in existence, is the legal owner of the road and has a right to pay the overdue interest on its bonds, and to take possession of it."

The consolidation took place in Missouri under an Act of that State approved March 24, 1870 (Laws of 25th General Assembly, adjourned session, p. 89), the first section of which is as follows: "Section 1. Any two or more railroad companies in this State, existing under either general or special laws, and owning railroads constructed wholly or in part, which, when completed and connected, will form in the whole or in the main one continuous line of railroad, are hereby authorized to consolidate in the whole or in the main, and form one company owning and controlling such continuous line of road, with all the powers, rights, privileges and immunities, and subject to all the obligations and liabilities to the State, or otherwise, which belonged to or rested upon either of the companies making such consolidation. In order to accomplish such consolidation, the companies interested may enter into contract fixing the terms and conditions thereof, which shall first be ratified and approved by a majority in interest of all the stock held in each company or road proposing to consolidate, at a meeting of the stockholders regularly called for the purpose, or by the approval, in writing, of the persons or parties holding and representing a majority of such stock. A certified copy of such articles of agreement, with the corporate name to be assumed by the new company, shall be filed with the secretary of state, when the consolidation shall be considered duly consummated, and a certified copy from the office of the secretary of state shall be deemed conclusive evidence thereof. The board of directors of the several companies may then proceed to carry out such contract according to its provisions, calling in the certificates of stock then outstanding in the several companies or roads, and issuing certificates of stock in the new consolidated company under such corporate name as may have been adopted; provided, however, That the foregoing provisions of this section shall not be construed to authorize the consolidation of any railroad companies or roads, except when by such consolidation a continuous line of road is secured running in the whole or in the main in the same general direction; and provided, It shall not be lawful for said roads to consolidate in the whole or in part, when by so doing it will deprive the public of the benefit of competition between said roads. And in case any such railroad companies shall consolidate or attempt to consolidate their roads contrary to the provisions of this Act, such consolidation shall be void, and any person or party aggrieved, whether stockholders or not, may bring action against them in the circuit court of any county through which such road may pass, which court shall have jurisdiction in the case and power to restrain by injunction or otherwise. And in case any railroad in this State shall hereafter intersect any such consolidated road, said road or roads shall have the right to run their freight cars without breaking bulk upon said consolidated road, and such consolidated road shall transact the business of said intersecting or connecting road or roads on fair and reasonable terms, and the same may be enforced by appropriate legislation. Before any railroad companies shall consolidate their roads, under the provisions of this Act, they shall each file with the secretary of state a resolution accepting the provisions thereof, to be signed by their respective presidents and attested by their respective secretaries, under the seal of their respective companies, which resolution shall have been passed by a majority vote of the stock of each at a meeting of the stockholders thereof, to be called for the purpose of considering the same."

The circuit court, after quoting this section of the Statute, proceeds to say: "A certified copy of the articles of agreement under which the consolidation was effected, with the corporate name of the new company, was duly filed with the secretary of state, as this law requires. But there is no evidence in this record of the filing with the secretary of state, by each of the companies so consolidated, of a resolution accepting the provisions of the Act, passed by a majority of the stockholders, at a meeting of stockholders called for the purpose of considering the same, nor is there any evidence of such meeting of the stockholders of the companies separately, except such as may be implied from the certified copy of the articles of agreement of consolidation duly filed in the secretary's office. Is the absence of any evidence of these meetings and of the passage of the resolutions to accept the provisions of the Act by the respective companies fatal to the creation of the new consolidated company, when all other requirements of the Statute shall have been complied with? It will be observed that this is the last provision in the Statute, though the thing ordered to be done is one of the first steps required in the process. It is also a provision which may well be held to be directory, and designed to secure evidence that each of the companies intending to consolidate recognize the Statute as the sole authority for such consolidation, and their obligation to be governed by its provisions. If the other essential provisions of the Act were complied with, it does not necessarily follow that the whole proceeding would be void for a failure to comply with this direction of the Act. It is argued, however, that by the express language of the Statute it is declared that, 'in case any such railroad companies shall consolidate or attempt to consolidate their roads contrary to the provisions of this Act, such consolidation shall be void, and any person or party aggrieved, whether stockholders or not, may bring action against them in the circuit court of any county through which such road may pass, which court shall have jurisdiction in the case and power to restrain by injunction or otherwise.' This sentence does not come after but before the provision concerning the resolution accepting the law under which consolidation is made. In the orderly succession of ideas, this concerning the accepting the provisions of the Statute was not in the mind of the draftsman when the provision making the consolidation void was penned. On the other hand, the limitation that the companies which are authorized to consolidate are only those whose roads when united 'will form in the whole or in the main one continuous line of railroad,' and that this authority 'shall not be construed to authorize the consolidation of any railroad companies or roads, except when by such consolidation a continuous line of road is secured, running in the whole or in the main in the same general direction,' and 'it shall not be lawful for said roads to consolidate in the whole or in part, when by doing so it will deprive the public of the benefit of competition between said roads,' immediately precedes the declaration that any attempt to consolidate contrary to the provisions of the Act shall be void. It is the consolidation of such roads as do not form when so consolidated one continuous line, but may be made up of parallel and competing lines, which is forbidden and declared to be void. The language of the remedy prescribed by the Statute indicates that it is for the violation of this principle that it is given. The court of the county in which the road lies or through which it passes, not that where the company has its organization or offices, shall have jurisdiction, and the remedy shall be to restrain the company by injunction or otherwise. It is the continuity or parallelism of the roads, the benefit of competition by roads between the same points, which is to be secured. And it is clear that the Legislature was not so much interested about the companies and their amalgamation into one company as they were that rival roads and competing roads should not be consolidated and brought under the same control. I doubt very much whether the Legislature intended to declare that even for a violation of this principle, much less of any of the other mere details of the mode of accomplishing this consolidation, it should be absolutely void, void ab initio, void anywhere and under all circumstances, but only, as the word 'void' is so often used in legislation and in written agreements, that it should be voidable; that if on investigation the roads were of that character which the Statute forbids to be consolidated, the proper court could so declare and annul and avoid the consolidation. This is the more reasonable, as the parallelism or competing character of the two roads, if it were disputed, could only be satisfactorily ascertained by a judicial investigation, and it could not be permitted that any man who wished to do so could assume for himself that the consolidation was void and act accordingly. Without the aid of the Statute, if the Legislature or the governor or the attorney-general of the State believed the roads were not such as the law permitted to be consolidated, they could, by the institution of proper proceedings in a court of justice, have the act of consolidation annulled, if they were correct in their views. This Statute confers the right on any person aggrieved by such improper consolidation to have relief by application to the proper court, which would not otherwise exist.

"In regard to the acceptance of the provisions of the Consolidation Act to be filed with the secretary of state, this is eminently a matter between the State and the corporations whose rights are affected, and if, on a failure to file such acceptance, the consolidation is to become void, it is the privilege of the State to enforce the forfeiture or annulment, and not of every private person who shows an injustice or injury done to himself. But if this was more doubtful than it is, it appears to me that the proposition here insisted on is concluded by this language of the Act: 'A certified copy of such articles of agreement [for consolidation], with the corporate name to be assumed by the new company, shall be filed with the secretary of state, when the consolidation shall be considered duly consummated, and a certified copy from the office of the secretary of state shall be deemed conclusive evidence thereof.' This certified copy from the secretary's office is to be considered evidence of something. Let us consider what and its effect as evidence. 1. Of what is it to be a copy? Of the articles of agreement for consolidation made by the companies to be consolidated; not of all the requirements of the Statute, preliminary or otherwise. 2. What shall it prove? That thereafter the consolidation shall be considered duly consummated. There is no ambiguity in this. It shall be evidence that the consolidation has been perfected, and has resulted in the creation of a new corporation, whose name is to be found in this certified copy. 3. What is the effect of this evidence? The Statute says it shall be conclusive. It is not necessary here to hold that, in a direct proceeding on the part of the State to have a declaration of the nullity of such a consolidation, no evidence can be received to impeach the validity of the original act of consolidation. It is my opinion that in such case the certified copy from the secretary's office would not be conclusive, but prima facie, evidence.

"But what is meant and what is reasonable is, that when a corporation so organized comes into a court of justice, either as plaintiff or defendant in a contest with individuals or other corporations in regard to any matter affecting its rights, its powers, its authority to make contracts, to sue or to be sued, the production of the paper mentioned shall end all inquiry into its existence as a corporation, with such powers as the law confers on it. It would be burdensome in the extreme, a hardship altogether unnecessary to any proper purpose, to require of a corporation doing an immense business to prove, in every controversy it may have growing out of that business, that all the steps which the law directs for the consolidation proceedings have been strictly complied with. The hardship would be as great on those who sue it for violated duty of contract, or otherwise, to be required to prove in the same manner the existence of the corporation which they bring into court.

"The question of the existence of this corporation arises incidentally in this effort of the County of Leavenworth to assert the rights of another company, and, though the bill prays that the consolidation be held void, it is not the State which makes this request or institutes or controls this proceeding, nor is the proceeding itself of the character of a direct suit for the purpose of procuring such a decree, which would bind the company in any other case.

"I am of the opinion that the consolidation of August, 1871, was valid, and that this corporation thus formed succeeded to the rights, the property and the obligations of the Chicago and Southwestern Company created by the consolidation of September, 1869, and that it was the proper party to be sued and to represent all the interests of all the stockholders in all the corporations of which it was composed, including the County of Leavenworth as one of these stockholders."

We have carefully considered the views urged on the part of the appellant, in regard to the propositions thus laid down by the circuit court, and are of opinion that those propositions are sound; and it is sufficient for us to express our concurrence in them, without adding more.

The circuit court, in its opinion, next discusses the question of the validity of the proceedings in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Iowa, under which the road of the Southwestern Company was sold, and afterwards became a part of the new system of consolidated roads held by the Rock Island Company, and says: "The matter is much simplified by the fact that that court had jurisdiction of the case, jurisdiction of the parties plaintiff and defendant, of all the necessary parties to the relief sought and of the subject matter of the suit. For any mere error of that court in its decision on matters of law or fact, the proper remedy was by appeal, and one of the parties did as to its own interest take such appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, which affirmed the decree. Another remedy was by bill of review asking the same court to reconsider and reverse or modify its decree on the same or on newly discovered evidence. This course has not been adopted, and it admits of very serious doubt whether any proceeding can be sustained in any other court the purpose of which is to set aside the decree of that court in the matter, of which it had jurisdiction. I know of no reason why the suit to have a decree declaring null and void the foreclosure proceedings of that court, by reason of any fraud in its procurement, whether it be legal fraud implied from the relations of the parties, or actual fraud practiced in the progress of the case, should not have been brought in the court where these proceedings were had.

"Considering, however, the jurisdiction of this court—the Circuit Court for the Western District of Missouri—to grant some form of relief inconsistent with the binding efficacy of the decrees of the Circuit Court for the District of Iowa, let us inquire on what grounds the efficacy of those decrees is denied. Although in the more enlarged use of the word it may be said the grounds are all founded on fraud, they present in reality two distinct propositions, namely:

"(1) That such were the relations of the trustees in the mortgage to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Company, at whose instance the mortgage was foreclosed, and the relations of those trustees and the governing officers of the Rock Island Company to the debtor, the Southwestern Company, and the relations of the officers of both these companies to each other and to both of these companies, that there could be no just and rightful foreclosure as between these parties, and that the action of the trustees in the mortgage deed and of the Rock Island Company, as moved by its officers, in promoting the foreclosure, was a violation of the trust reposed in all these parties, for the breach of which the whole proceeding must be held void."

By a statement in the brief of the counsel for the appellant, showing the shares of the stock and the stockholders of the Chicago and Southwestern Railway Company, as voted at the meetings of the stockholders from 1869 to 1876 inclusive, and a list of its officers and directors during the same period, the following appears:

At the first meeting of the stockholders of the consolidated company, in 1869, there were present 10,896 shares, being those held in the original constituent companies. Of these shares, Leavenworth County voted 3,000, the East Leavenworth Improvement Association 5,000, four officers and directors of the Rock Island Company 10 each, and the remaining shares were held by various individuals in small amounts. Thirteen directors were elected at that meeting, of whom five were officers or directors of the Rock Island Railroad Company, one of such five being its general solicitor.

No meeting of the stockholders was held in 1870. In 1871, at the stockholders' meeting, 67,500 shares were voted, of which 25,000 were voted by such general solicitor, and 25,000 by another person connected with the Rock Island Company. Of the directory of thirteen persons, nine were officers or directors of the Rock Island Company. Two of the five officers of the road, namely, the treasurer and transfer-agent and the general solicitor, were connected with the Rock Island Company; and of the executive committee of five, three were officers of the latter Company.

At the stockholders' meeting in 1872, 88,719 shares were voted, of which 60,983 were voted by persons connected with the Rock Island Company; and on the day after such meeting 68,247 shares of the stock of the Southwestern Company were transferred to the president of the Rock Island Company, who was also a director of the Southwestern Company. In 1872, nine out of the thirteen directors of the Southwestern Company, including the president and the treasurer, were representatives of the Rock Island Company, as were also three out of the five members of the executive committee.

In 1873, 77,284 shares were voted, of which 68,250 were voted by persons connected with the Rock Island Company, all of the shares so voted, except 1,505, being represented by the solicitor of the Rock Island Company. Of the board of directors of the Southwestern Company during 1872, nine of the thirteen were officers or directors or employes of the Rock Island Company.

At the stockholders' meeting in 1874, 74,628 shares were voted, of which all except 504 were voted by representatives of the Rock Island Company.

At the stockholders' meeting in 1875, 75,781 shares were voted, all of which were voted by representatives of the Rock Island Company.

At the stockholders' meeting in 1876, 76,788 shares were voted, all but 505 of which were voted by the general solicitor of the Rock Island Company, as proxy. At the subsequent meetings of the stockholders, held down to 1880, 68,246 shares were voted in the interest of the Rock Island Company. It does not appear by the records that there has been any meeting of the board of directors of the Southwestern Company, or any election of officers of the company other than directors, since 1876.

This state of things is summed up thus in the opinion of the circuit court: "It must be admitted that the case made is a very strong one. One of the trustees of the mortgage deed was a director in the Rock Island Company; both the others were stockholders in it. The president of the Rock Island Company was president of the Southwestern Company. A majority of the directors of the Southwestern Company were directors in the Rock Island Company. There was in the hands of the president of the Rock Island Company a majority of the stock of the Southwestern Company. The attorney who appeared and represented the Southwestern Company had been previously in the employ of the Rock Island Company, and the attorneys who brought the foreclosure suit in the name of the trustees were afterwards, in many matters, attorneys for the Rock Island Company, and one of the attorneys of the Rock Island Company in the foreclosure suit was at the time a director in the Southwestern Company."

On these facts the circuit court remarks as follows: "As regards the attorneys it can hardly be admitted as an impeachment of the attorney of the defendant, the Southwestern Company, that he had been or was afterwards an attorney of the Rock Island Company, nor will it be presumed that if he was even then in the employment of the Rock Island Company in other matters he did not or would not faithfully represent the Southwestern Company in this matter; and his character repels any such inference. Nor does the fact that the attorney of the Rock Island Company was a director in the Southwestern Company, though the interest of the two companies might conflict, preclude him from acting as attorney for the former Company, and we see no reason why the men then and afterwards attorneys for the Rock Island Company should not represent the trustees in the mortgage, as there was no conflict of interest between the trustees and the Rock Island Company. In reference to the relations of the officers of the two companies to those companies and to each other, it is quite apparent, from the consolidation of the Iowa and the Missouri companies on the 26th of September, 1869, and the contract between this consolidated company and the Rock Island on the 1st day of October, that the purpose of the Rock Island Company, or of those who had its control, was to secure and retain a paramount influence in the directory of the Chicago and Southwestern; and in point of fact it cannot be doubted that it did obtain and exercise at times such control. While it is not necessary to consider that the purpose of this contract was to injure the Southwestern Company, but in the view of all the parties it was to advance the interest of both companies, it is certainly true that the primary object in the minds of those controlling the Rock Island Company was to make the other road a subsidiary and feeding road to its own line. This purpose was not necessarily a bad one, and was or might have been consistent with the best interests of both companies. The Rock Island Company paid a valuable consideration for this control and the other company received it. It indorsed the bonds of the Southwestern Company to the amount of $5,000,000 and agreed to protect it against a foreclosure of the mortgage given to secure the payment of these bonds during the period of construction of the road. The burden of this obligation and its importance to the success of the undeveloped enterprises of the new company cannot be easily overrated. The road could not have been built without it. The money for the construction of the track and laying it with iron came almost exclusively from the sale of these bonds, and that the money was raised on them was due, not to the credit of the Southwestern Company or to the mortgage on a road barely begun, but to the indorsement of the Rock Island Company and the credit which that indorsement gave to the bonds. This credit and assumption of liability by the Rock Island Company enabled the Southwestern Company to build its road to completion. There was nothing, therefore, fraudulent or oppressive in that Company's seeking to retain such control of the road as would enable it to realize the consideration for which it assumed this obligation of $5,000,000. Matters were in this condition when the road was completed, but the Southwestern Company had no means of equipping its road with rolling stock and meeting other necessary outlays. The Rock Island Company furnished this, and used the road under an arrangement for lease, never, perhaps, fully consummated. But at the end of two or three years, in which it kept an account of receipts and expenditures, it was found that the Southwestern Company was indebted over a million of dollars for repairs and construction of the road, and had defaulted in payment of the interest on its bonds to an amount nearly equal, the coupons for which had been paid by the Rock Island Company as indorser, and were held by it. That Company determined then to assert the right which its contract gave to have the mortgage foreclosed to satisfy the interest which it had paid on the bonds it had indorsed. Unless there was some injustice in the manner in which it had managed the road or kept its accounts, I see no defect in its right to insist on the foreclosure. If the Rock Island Company had a right to insist on this foreclosure, it was the duty of the trustees in the deed of trust to bring the suit for that purpose. I am unable to see anything in the fact that some of the same men were found to be trustees in this deed and directors in the Rock Island Company, and that directors in the Southwestern Company were also directors in the Rock Island Company, which should block the course of justice, paralyze the power of the court and deprive the creditor corporation of all remedy for the enforcement of its lien. If it could be shown that the Southwestern Company did not owe this interest, or that the Rock Island Company had in its hands the means of the Southwestern Company to meet this obligation, and that by reason of collusion between those who controlled both companies this fact was suppressed or concealed, it would present a strong case for relief. But this would be actual fraud, and one not necessarily growing out of the influence of the Rock Island directory over that of the Southwestern. Notwithstanding this commingling of officers, the corporations were distinct corporations. They had a right to make contracts with each other in their corporate capacities, and they could sue and be sued by each other in regard to these contracts; and the question is not, Could they do these things? but, Have the relations of the parties—the trust relations, if indeed such existed—been abused to the serious injury of the Southwestern Company? In regard to the legal right of the Rock Island Company to have the mortgage foreclosed in satisfaction of the sum paid by it for interest after the completion of the road, it seems to me there can be no reasonable doubt."

The counsel for the appellant, in his brief, after urging the propositions that the plaintiff is entitled to bring and maintain this suit for the relief prayed, contends that, by reason of the trust relations existing between the Rock Island and the Southwestern Companies, quite aside from any proof of actual fraud or damage, the decree of foreclosure is no bar to the accounting and relief sought by the bill in this case. To support this proposition the cases are cited of Davoue v. Fanning, 2 Johns. Ch. 252; Michoud v. Girod, 45 U. S. 4 How. 503 [11: 1076]; Koehler v. Black River Falls Iron Co. 67 U. S. 2 Black, 715 [17: 339]; Drury v. Cross, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 299 [19: 40]; Marsh v. Whitmore, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 178, 188, 184 [22: 482, 485]; Jackson v. Ludeling, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 616 [22:

492]; Twin Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587 [23: 329]; Wardell v. Union Pac. R. Co., 108 U. S. 651 [26: 509]; Thomas v. Brownsville, Ft. K. & P. R. Co., 109 U. S. 522 [27: 1018]; Allen v. Gillette, 127 U. S. 589 [32: 271]; Benson v. Heathorn, 1 Younge & C. Ch. 326; Aberdeen R. Co. v. Blakie, 1 Macq. H. L. Cas. 461; Lydney Co. v. Bird, 55 L. T. N. S. 558; Hoyle v. Plattsburgh & Montreal R. Co., 54 N. Y. 314, and other cases.

But, notwithstanding the general principle laid down in the cases cited, we concur in the views thus taken of the present case by the circuit court, and place our decision as to this branch of it on the same grounds.

The next proposition considered by the circuit court is as to whether there was any actual fraud perpetrated in the progress of the foreclosure suit, to the prejudice of the present plaintiff.

On that question, the circuit court says, in its opinion: "The principal ground of complaint under this head is, that the Rock Island Company, being in actual possession and use of the road on which the mortgage was a lien, should have used its revenue first to pay the interest and have postponed the repairs and construction to that purpose. The proper place to have made this defense was in the foreclosure suit. Though it may be said that the Southwestern Company made no such defense because it was in the control of the Rock Island Company directory, which is plausible if not sound, it is to be observed that this suit was in the court for more than a year; that it is hardly possible that the authorities of the County of Leavenworth did not know of its pendency and who were the directors in its own company, and if it had at any time appeared in that court and sought to make the defense it now sets up it would have been permitted to do so. Such defense, including also the correctness of the accounts of the Rock Island Company, was made by a Mr. Mueller, representative of the bondholders under the second mortgage made to obtain money to build the Atchison branch. On his motion he was made defendant and permitted to file a cross-bill. The claim of the Rock Island Company for the interest paid by it as indorser, its claim for expenditures in repairs and construction, and the correctness of its accounts and its appropriation of the receipts from the Southwestern Road, were all assailed by him in a cross-bill and referred to a master, before whom his counsel appeared and to whose report he excepted. This report was confirmed and became the basis of the decree as to the amount due the Rock Island Company under the mortgage, and of a personal judgment for repairs and construction. From this decree Mueller took an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the decree was affirmed. But I must add that even now, after all the proofs taken in the present case, I do not see that if the County of Leavenworth had been a party to that suit, or if the counsel for the Southwestern Company had been ever so anxious to prevent a foreclosure, what defense he could have successfully presented, or how he could have diminished the amount which the court found to be due from that company on the mortgage. The case is one not uncommon of a road completed which in its first years did not earn enough money to pay its running expenses, its necessary repairs and the interest on its bonded debt. Such roads have often been sold out under foreclosure proceedings, and passing into other hands have become successful and profitable enterprises. The original owners see then, when it is too late, that they permitted a valuable property to pass from them which they would gladly reclaim. But courts of equity do not sit to restore opportunities or renew possibilities which have been permitted to pass by the neglect, the ignorance or even the want of means of those to whom they were once presented. It follows from these views, without reference to many other matters presented for consideration, that the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief it asks or to any relief founded on this bill. It must therefore be dismissed, and it is so ordered."

On the question thus considered the counsel for the appellant cites the cases of United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61 [25: 93], and Pacific Railroad of Mo. v. Missouri Pacific R. Co., 111 U. S. 505 [28: 498]. But we concur in the views of the circuit court, and are of opinion that it is not shown that the decree in the foreclosure suit was procured by fraud or collusion. It would serve no good purpose to examine in detail the testimony bearing on this subject.

These conclusions make it unnecessary to consider the defenses of the Statute of Limitations and of laches, as urged by the appellees.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller and Mr. Justice Brewer did not sit in this case or take any part in its decision.

judge to take jurisdiction and render an adjudication authorizing the town to issue its bonds in aid of a railroad company, which only alleges that the petitioners "are a majority of the taxpayers" and represent "a majority of the taxable property" therein.

2. The petition should state in substance, that the taxpayers petitioning were a majority of taxpayers of the town, who were taxed or assessed for property, not including those taxed for dogs or highway tax only.
3. The adjudication of the county judge was not sufficient to authorize the town to create and issue its bonds pursuant to said Laws of New York which only adjudged that the petitioners represent a majority of the taxpayers and of the taxable property of said town.
4. It was essential, in order to confer authority upon the town to create and issue its bonds, under said Laws of 1869 and 1871, that the adjudication or judgment of the county judge should declare, in substance, that the quorum of taxpayers who desired that the town should create and issue its bonds, was one exclusive of taxpayers who were assessed or taxed for dogs or highway tax only.

Argued March 25, 1890. Decided April 14, 1890.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York to review a judgment for defendant in an action against the Town of Mentz to recover interest coupons of bonds alleged to have been issued by the Town in aid of the Cayuga Northern Railroad Company upon questions certified to the court on division in opinion.

Affirmed.

Reported below, 18 Fed. Rep. 52, 19 Fed. Rep. 725.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This is an action brought by George L. Rich in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York, against the Town of Mentz, to recover the amount of sixty interest coupons attached to certain bonds held by him, and alleged to have been issued by the Town on July 15, 1872, in aid of the Cayuga Northern Railroad Company.

The cause was tried by the circuit and district judges, a jury being duly waived, and the court made its special findings as follows:

"I. On the 18th day of July, 1872, there levy tax to pay bonds or interest on bonds, see note to Davenport v. U. S. 19: 704.

Jennings*, 119 U. S. 74 (30: 823).

A recital in municipal bonds that they are issued "under and pursuant to law" does not estop the corporation from asserting the contrary. Katzenberger v. Aberdeen, 121 U. S. 172 (30: 911).

One who sues upon negotiable bonds of a township, containing no statement of the purpose for which they were issued, and no recital which can bind the town by way of estoppel, must allege and prove authority to issue them. Hopper v. Covington, 118 U. S. 148 (30: 190).

 Mentz, Cayuga County, N. Y. }
 "To the Honorable the County Judge of the County of Cayuga, N. Y.

"The petition of the subscribers hereto respectfully shows: That they are a majority of the taxpayers of the Town of Mentz, in the County of Cayuga, and State of New York, whose names appear upon the last preceding assessment-roll or tax-list of said Town of Mentz, as owning or representing a majority of the taxable property in the corporate limits of the said Town of Mentz; that they are such a majority of taxpayers, and are taxed or assessed for, or represent, such a majority of taxable property; that they desire that said Town shall create and issue its bonds to the amount of thirty thousand dollars ($30,000), which said amount does not exceed twenty per centum of the whole amount of taxable property, as shown by said assessment-roll or list, and invest the same, or the proceeds thereof, in the stock of the Cayuga Northern Railroad Company, which is a railroad company in the State of New York.

"And your petitioners pray your honor to cause to be published the proper notice, to take proof of the facts set forth in this petition; and that such proceedings may be had thereon as are authorized and prescribed by the statutes of the State of New York, in such case made and provided.

"Dated April 20, A. D. 1872.

 Cayuga County, N. Y.

"On the petition herein bearing date the 20th day of April, A. D. 1872, and on motion of H. V. Howland, attorney for said petitioners, it is ordered that a notice be forthwith published in the Auburn Daily Advertiser, a newspaper published in the said County of Cayuga, directed to whom it may concern, and setting forth that on the 8th day of June, A. D. 1872, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, I, William E. Hughitt, county judge of the County of Cayuga, in the State of New York, will proceed to take proof of the facts set forth in said petition, as to the number of taxpayers joining in said petition, and as to the amount of taxable property represented by them; and that such proof will be taken at the grand jury room, in the court-house in the City of Auburn, in said County of Cayuga, N. Y.

"Dated this 28th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1872.

"County of Cayuga.

"In the matter of the applica- } tion of the taxpayers of the } Judgment.
 Town of Mentz. }

"Upon the filing the petition herein and order made thereon, with a copy of the notice to take proof of the facts set forth in said petition, and the affidavit of publication of the said notice in the manner required by law, and by the order made in this proceeding as aforesaid, together with the testimony taken therein; and it appearing to the satisfaction of the court that the whole number of taxpayers in the Town of Mentz, Cayuga County and State of New York, whose names appear upon the last assessment-roll or tax-list for the year 1871, is 484, and that of this number 225 have signed the said petition, being more than one half of said taxpayers; and it further appearing that the total valuation of the taxable property of the said Town of Mentz upon the said assessment-roll or tax-list is five hundred and forty thousand six hundred and forty-five dollars, and that the valuation of the property of the petitioners as represented upon the said roll or tax-list is $812,350, being thirty-one thousand and twenty-eight dollars in excess of one half of the total valuation of the taxable property of said Town of Mentz.

"Now on motion of H. V. Howland, attorney for said petitioners, it is adjudged, decreed and determined that the said petitioners do represent a majority of the taxpayers of said Town of Mentz as shown by the last preceding tax-list or assessment-roll, that is to say, the said tax-list or assessment-roll for the year 1871, and do represent a majority of the taxable property upon said tax-list or assessment-roll.

"And it is hereby ordered, that William A. Halsey, E. B. Somers and J. H. Wethey, three freeholders, residents and taxpayers within the corporate limits of the said Town of Mentz, be, and they hereby are, appointed commissioners for the period of five years next ensuing, and until others are appointed by a county judge of this county, or other competent authority, to cause or execute in due form of law, with all reasonable dispatch, bonds of the said Town of Mentz, of the amount of $100 each, to the amount of thirty thousand dollars, and to issue or sell the same, or dispose of the same and invest the same or the proceeds thereof in, and to subscribe in the name of the said Town of Mentz, to the stock of "The Cayuga Northern Railroad Company" to the amount of $30,000; and that the said commissioners and each of them shall have all the powers and be subject to the same duties and liabilities, imposed and prescribed in and by the Act of the Legislature of the State of New York entitled "An Act to Amend an Act to Authorize the Formation of Railroad Companies and to Regulate the Same," passed April 2d, 1850 (and all other Acts pertaining to that subject) "so as to Permit Municipal Corporations to Aid in the Construction of Railroads," passed

May 18, 1869, and the several Acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

"And it is further adjudged and ordered, that notice of the final determination herein as aforesaid be forthwith published in the Auburn Daily Advertiser, a newspaper published in the said County of Cayuga, once in each week for three weeks.

"Dated July 17, 1872.

"W. E. Hughitt,

"Cayuga County Judge."

"(Indorsed: 'Filed July 17, 1872.')

"(Due proofs were made of publication of the foregoing determination.)

"II. The Cayuga Northern Railroad Company was duly incorporated under the General Statutes of the State, on the 22d of April, 1872.

"III. The persons named in said adjudication of the county judge aforesaid, qualified as commissioners under the Statute and subscribed, in behalf of said Town of Mentz, for 800 shares of the capital stock of said company, of the par value of $100 per share, and paid therefor by the issue to said company of thirty Town-of-Mentz bonds of $1,000 each, in form as set out in the complaint, with coupons attached in the usual form, providing for the payment of interest semi-annually, January and July; principal payable July 15, 1902.

"The coupons were all in the following form:

"$35.00.

"The Town of Mentz, County of Cayuga, will pay the bearer hereof at the Fourth National Bank of New York, in the City of New York, on the 15th day of July, 1876, the sum of thirty-five dollars, for six months' interest then due on bond No. 7.

"$35.00. W. A. Halsey, Commissioner."

"IV. Prior to the commencement of this action the plaintiff became a purchaser of the five bonds and attached coupons which are described in the declaration in this action, from one Deming, who had theretofore purchased the same for cash, and without notice of any infirmity, the plaintiff being a resident citizen of the State of Iowa.

"V. Plaintiff produced said five bonds, with twelve coupons, each $35, cut from each, in all sixty coupons, which with the interest to the day of trial amounted to $2,886.25.

"VI. That no part of said railroad has ever been built; but the Town of Mentz raised the money by tax, according to said Statute, and has paid the coupons of the entire issue, which fell due January 15, 1873; the Town has never paid any other coupons, and said commissioners have retained, and now hold, the usual certificates of stock in the said railroad company, 800 shares, received by them at the time of the delivery of said bonds to the railroad company.

"VII. All the proofs were taken subject to defendant's objection, that the county judge acquired no jurisdiction under the original petition; and also that the judgment of the county judge was insufficient.

"And defendant insisted upon the aforesaid objection, and prayed for a dismissal of the complaint with costs."

184 U. S.

The form of the bonds, of which plaintiff held five, numbered 21, 22, 23, 24 and 25, with their coupons, was thus set out in the complaint:

"No. 21. United States of America, $1,000.
State of New York, Town of Mentz,
County of Cayuga.

"Issued by virtue of an Act of the Legislature of the State of New York, entitled, 'An Act to Amend an Act Entitled an Act to Authorize the Formation of Railroad Corporations, and to Regulate the Same, Passed April 2, 1850, so as to Permit Municipal Corporations to Aid in the Construction of Railroads, Passed May 18, 1869.'

"This Act authorizes the Town of Mentz, in the County of Cayuga, to subscribe to the stock of 'The Cayuga Northern Railroad Co.,' and to issue town bonds in payment therefor. The whole amount of the bonds to be issued in pursuance of said Act is $80,000.

"Know all men by these presents, that we, the undersigned commissioners under the above-entitled Acts, for the Town of Mentz, in the County of Cayuga and State of New York, upon the faith and credit and in behalf of said Town, for value received promise to pay to the bearer the sum of one thousand dollars on the 1st day of July in the year one thousand nine hundred and two (1902) at the Fourth National Bank of New York in the City of New York, with interest at seven per cent per annum, from and after the 15th day of July, 1872, payable semi-annually upon the 15th days of July and January in each year at the same place, on the presentation and surrender of the coupons for such interest hereto annexed.

"In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals and have caused the coupons hereto annexed to be signed by W. A. Halsey, one of our number, this 15th day of July in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two.

"J. H. Wethey. [L. s.]"

The judges of the court being divided in opinion as to the sufficiency of the petition, and of the adjudication and judgment of the county judge, judgment was ordered for the defendant in accordance with the opinion of the circuit judge, and the following questions, upon which the division of opinion arose, were certified to this court:

"First. Was the petition of certain taxpayers of the Town of Mentz, which was presented to the county judge of Cayuga County, in the State of New York, on the 28th day of May, 1872, and a copy of which is set forth in the finding and decision of the court, sufficient in the form and substance of its recital, to authorize the said county judge to take jurisdiction and proceed to render an adjudication pursuant to chapter 907 of the Laws of New York of 1869, as amended by chapter 925 of the Laws of New York of 1871?

"Second. Was it essential in order to confer jurisdiction upon said county judge, to adjudicate pursuant to section 2 of chapter

907 of the Laws of 1869, as amended by section 2 of chapter 925 of the Laws of 1871, that the petition should state, among other things, in substance, that the taxpayers petitioning were a majority of taxpayers of the Town of Mentz, who were taxed or assessed for property, not including those taxed for dogs or highway tax only?

"Third. Was the adjudication of the county judge of Cayuga County, made on the 17th day of July, 1872, a copy of which is set forth in the findings and decision of the court, sufficient to authorize the defendant to create and issue its bonds pursuant to chapter 907 of the Laws of New York of 1869, as amended by chapter 925 of the Laws of New York of 1871?

"Fourth. Was it essential in order to confer authority upon the defendant to create and issue its bonds under said Laws of 1869 and 1871, that the adjudication or judgment of the county judge should declare, in substance, that the quorum of taxpayers who desired that the defendant should create and issue its bonds, was one exclusive of taxpayers who were assessed or taxed for dogs or highway tax only?"

The opinion of the circuit judge is reported in 19 Fed. Rep. 725, and of the district judge in 18 Fed. Rep. 52.

Mr. James R. Cox, for plaintiff in error: It was evidently not intended by the Legislature that the county judge's judgment should be liable to collateral attacks.

In the original Act of 1869, the word "such" clearly refers to the last tax-list and representation of property, and cannot be made to refer to any class of non-taxpayers.

The office of the petition is merely to authorize inquiry into the facts.

Craig v. Andes, 93 N. Y. 421.

After judgment, when attacked collaterally, and where it is obvious that the proofs taken must have covered the alleged defect, no court ever holds the judgment bad.

The petition must set forth that the petitioners are a majority of that class who alone are competent to petition.

A recital in municipal bonds does not extend to matters of law.

Lake County v. Graham, 180 U. S. 674 (32: 1065).

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Where a majority of the taxpayers of a town are authorized by statute to incur the property of all, in aid of a railroad or other corporation, the record must show that the statutory authority has been pursued. Coudrey v. Canadea, 16 Fed. Rep. 532, and cases cited.

Section 1 of chapter 907 of the Laws of New York of 1869 (Laws 1869, vol. 2, p. 2303) was as follows:

"Whenever a majority of the taxpayers of any municipal corporation in this State, whose names appear upon the last preceding tax-list or assessment-roll of said corporation as owning or representing a majority of the taxable property in the corporate limits of such corporation, shall make application to the county judge of the county in which such corporation is situated, by petition verified by one of the petitioners, setting forth that they are such a majority of taxpayers and represent such a majority of taxable property, and that they desire that such municipal corporation shall create and issue its bonds to an amount named in such petition," etc.

That section was so amended by section one of chapter 925 of the Laws of New York of 1871 (Laws 1871, vol. 2, p. 2115) as to read:

"Whenever a majority of the taxpayers of any municipal corporation in this State who are taxed or assessed for property, not including those taxed for dogs or highway tax only, upon the last preceding assessment-roll or tax-list of said corporation, and who are assessed or taxed, or represent a majority of the taxable property, upon said last assessment-roll or tax-list, shall make application to the county judge of the county in which such municipal corporation is situated, by petition, verified by one of the petitioners, setting forth that they are such majority of taxpayers, and are taxed or assessed for or represent such majority of taxable property, and that they desire, etc., etc. . . . The words 'municipal corporation' when used in this Act shall be construed to mean any city, town or incorporated village in this State, and the word 'taxpayer' shall mean any corporation or person assessed or taxed for property, either individually or as agent, trustee, guardian, executor or administrator, or who shall have been intended to have been thus taxed, and shall have paid or are liable to pay the tax as hereinbefore provided, or the owner of any nonresident lands taxed as such, not including those taxed for dogs or highway tax only; and the words 'tax-list or assessment-roll' when used in this Act shall mean the tax-list or assessment-roll of said municipal corporation last completed before the first presentation of such petition to the judge."

The bonds in controversy expressly recite that they are issued under the Act of 1869, and the petition and adjudication almost literally followed the language of that Act, although section 1 of chapter 925 of the Laws of 1871 had been substituted for section 1 of chapter 907 of the Act of 1869, before the proceeding was had. The result is that the petition did not sufficiently conform to the Statute of 1871 to call for the exercise of judicial judgment on the part of the county judge, and the adjudication was equally defective. The Act of 1871 defined the class of persons who were authorized to petition, as a majority of the taxpayers "who are taxed or assessed for property, not including those taxed for dogs or highway tax only, upon the last preceding assessment-roll or tax-list of said corporation, and who are assessed or taxed, or represent a majority of the taxable property, upon said last assessment-roll or tax-list." The statement of the jurisdictional facts in the petition required the averment that the petitioners were a majority of such taxpayers as were defined in the Act. This must appear affirmatively on the face of the petition. The Act expressly provides that the petition shall set forth that the petitioners are "such majority of taxpayers, and are taxed or assessed for or represent such majority of taxable property." The word "taxpayers" would not exclude those "taxed for dogs or highway tax only," and the petition must show that the petitioners are a majority, exclusive of the latter class. And this the petition here does not do, nor does the judgment of the county judge. It is provided by the Act of 1871, as it had been by that of 1869, that it shall be the duty of the county judge, at the time and place named in the notice given as prescribed, to proceed and take proof as to the allegations in said petition, and if it shall appear satisfactorily to him that the petitioners, and such other taxpayers as may then join in the application, do represent a majority of the taxpayers and a majority of the taxable property, he shall render judgment accordingly, which, being entered of record in the office of the clerk of the county, shall have the same force and effect as other judgments in courts of record in the State, subject to review by certiorari; and it is forcibly argued that the judgment of the county judge is not open to collateral attack. But this assumes that the jurisdiction of the county judge has been properly invoked, and has no application where that is not the case. Proof as to the allegations of this petition may have been taken, but such proof did not necessarily involve an inquiry into whether a part of the petitioning taxpayers were such because of the payment of highway taxes or taxes on dogs, and, as we have said, the judgment does not in terms show that such were not included. So that if the county judge had been charged with the ascertainment of the jurisdictional facts, the proceedings do not show that those facts were ascertained.

The fourth section of the Act of 1871 contains, among other things, this provision: "On review, persons taxed for dogs or highway tax only shall not be counted as taxpayers, unless that claim was made before the county judge." If this means, as counsel for plaintiff in error insists, that the objection when urged on review shall not prevail unless it had been taken before the county judge, it does not weaken but confirms the view that the verified petition must state that those who sign it are not taxpayers on dogs and for highways merely. The circuit judge, in his opinion in this case, correctly observes:

"It is insisted that, because the amended Act of 1871 defines the term 'taxpayer,' 'when used in this Act,' to mean such taxpayers as are not assessed for dogs or highway tax only, it is not necessary to comply with the explicit language of the Act as to the form and substance of the petition. The petition is the basis and groundwork of the whole bonding proceeding. When the amended Act was passed many of these proceedings had been set aside by the courts of this State because of defects of form in the petition; and it was the well-settled law of the state courts that any such defect was jurisdictional and rendered the whole proceeding futile. Speaking of the Act of 1869, the court of appeals said in People v. Smith, 45 N. Y. 772: 'The authority conferred by the Act must be exercised in strict conformity to, and by a rigid compliance with, the letter and spirit of the Statute.' The first section of the amended Act provides, in language as explicit as could be employed, that the petition, verified by one of the petitioners, shall set forth that the petitioners are a majority of taxpayers of the town who are taxed or assessed for property, 'not including those taxed for dogs or highway tax only.' It subsequently provides that the word 'taxpayer,' 'when used in this Act,' shall mean 'any corporation or person assessed or taxed for property, . . . not including those taxed for dogs or highway tax only.' Section 2 makes it the duty of the county judge 'to proceed and take proof as to the said allegations in the petition;' and if he finds that the requisite majority of taxpayers have consented, he shall so adjudge. If there were no express provision requiring it to appear in the petition that the taxpayers who apply are a majority of the designated class, the petition would doubtless be sufficient if it alleged that they were a majority of the taxpayers of the town; and, in this view, there was no need of amending the Act of 1869 in this behalf. If the argument for the plaintiff is sound this explicit provision is meaningless. It is not to be assumed that the Legislature did not mean anything by the language which they so carefully employed. It is not difficult to apprehend what the Legislature meant by defining the word 'taxpayer.' It occurs several times in the Act. It was defined for convenience, in order to avoid repetition of description whenever the word was used in the Act, and in order that there should be no room for doubt what kind of a taxpayer was meant whenever the word was used."

These views are in accordance with repeated adjudications of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York in construing this Statute; and upon questions of this character, when arising as here, the decisions of the highest judicial tribunal of a State are entitled to great and ordinarily decisive weight. Meriweather v. Muhlenburg County Court, 120 U. S. 854, 357 [80: 653, 654]; Claiborne County v. Brooks, 111 U. S. 400, 410 [28: 470, 474]. In Ments v. Cook, 108 N. Y. 504, 509 [11 Cent. Rep. 819], the court says: "The petition was presented after the Amendment of 1871 to the Act of 1869, and was defective in not averring that the petitioners were a majority of the taxpayers of the Town of Mentz, excluding those taxed for dogs or highway tax only. The fatal character of the defect has been so adjudged in this court as to end further discussion. People v. Smith, 55 N. Y. 185; Wellsborough v. New York & C. R. Co. 76 N. Y. 182; Metzger v. Attica & A. R. Co. 79 N. Y. 171. Our attention has heretofore been drawn (Hills v. Peekskill Sav. Bank, 101 N. Y. 490 [2 Cent. Rep. 463]), to the definition of the word 'taxpayers,' given in section 1 of the Act of 1871, and to the fact that such definition and its effect had never been directly passed upon by this court. The argument advanced is that the word 'taxpayers,' as used in the Act, is declared to mean taxpayers exclusive of those taxed for dogs or highway tax only, and that it is illogical to deny to the word, when used in a petition under the Act, the meaning ascribed to it by the Act itself. The suggestion is by no means conclusive, and admits of a satisfactory answer. The definition was given to avoid useless repetition, and is confined to its use in the Act itself. The petition is required to be verified, and to show on its face the consent of the requisite majority, and is not satisfied by an ambiguous oath, true in one sense and not true in another."

As on the face of these proceedings there was an entire want of power to issue the bonds, no reference to the doctrine of estoppel need be made. We answer the first and third questions in the negative, and the second and fourth in the affirmative.

The judgment is affirmed.

JOSEPH W. LACHER.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 624-632.)

Ambiguity in a statute—resort to prior statute—punctuation—intent governs construction of penal statute—secs. 5467 and 3891, Rev. Stat.

—embezzlement of letters and their contents—offenses—question on division in opinion improperly stated.

1. If there be any ambiguity in a section of the United States Revised Statutes, resort may be had to the original statute from which the section was taken, to ascertain what, if any, change of phraseology there is, and whether such change should be construed as changing the law.
2. For the purpose of arriving at the true meaning of a statute, courts read with such stops as are manifestly required.
3. Though penal laws are to be construed strictly, yet the intention of the Legislature must govern in the construction of penal as well as other statutes, and they are not to be construed so strictly as to defeat the obvious intention of the Legislature.
4. Two classes of offenses were intended to be created by section 5467, U. S. Rev. Stat., one relating to the embezzlement of letters, etc., and the other to stealing the contents.
5. Sections 3891 and 5467, U. S. Rev. Stat., are to be considered together, and the offenses of secreting, embossing or destroying mail matter, not containing articles of value, are punishable under the one, and containing such articles under the other.
6. The embezzlement by a person employed in a department of the postal service of a letter intended to be conveyed by mail and containing an article of value, which came into the possession of such person, is made an offense against the United States by sec. 5467, U. S. Rev. Stat., and the penalty is prescribed for such embezzlement by said section.
7. A question certified in a form disapproved of by this court, will not be answered: such as the question, "Whether an offense against the United States, under sec. 5467, Rev. Stat., is charged in either the 1st or 3d count of the indictment."

Argued April 23, 1888. Reargument ordered May 14, 1888. Submitted March 28, 1890. Decided April 14, 1890.

ON a certificate of division in opinion between the judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, on motions for new trials and in arrest of judgments, after a conviction of defendant, an employé in the New York Post-Office, for embezzling a letter containing an article of value, on an indictment under sec. 5467 of the Revised Statutes.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Wm. A. Maury, Assistant Atty. Gen., for plaintiff:

If a doubt arises as to the meaning of a provision of the Revised Statutes, resort may be had to the original statute from which such provision was taken for the purpose of ascertaining that meaning, the presumption being in favor of the continuance in the Revision of the law as it stood before the Revision went into effect.

If it be perfectly clear from the contents that the apparent grammatical construction cannot be the true one, then that which upon the whole is the true meaning shall prevail in spite of the grammatical construction of a particular part of it.

Waugh v. Middleton, 8 Exch. 352; Wilberforce, Statutes, 113, 114; Hardcastle, Statutes, 28, 29.

This court will never declare an Act of Congress unconstitutional on doubtful premises, and it has been astute to find reasons to avoid ascribing to Congress the intention to override a treaty (Cheong Heong v. U. S. 112 U. S. 536 (28: 770), or to put a fetter on a power lodged in the executive by the Constitution.

Blake v. U. S. 103 U. S. 227 (26: 462).

It is in a high degree disparaging to Congress to say that it had no purpose to make punishable, by section 5467, the grave offenses of secreting, embezzling and destroying letters containing articles of value. If it had no such purpose, why did it define those offenses? To suppose that Congress, while pretending to remedy such an evil, intended to pass an Act which by its own express words was to be rendered wholly ineffective under any possible circumstances, is to suppose Congress to be capable of deliberate folly, if not of fraud upon the public.

U. S. v. Stern, 5 Blatchf. 512.

The inartificial manner in which many of our statutes are framed, the inaptness of expressions frequently used, and the want of perspicuity and precision not unfrequently met with, often require the court to look less at the letter or words of the statute than at the context, the subject matter, the consequences and effects, and the reason and spirit of the law, in endeavoring to arrive at the will of the law-giver.

Where the alternative lies between either supplying words by implication or adopting a construction which deprives certain existing words of all meaning, it is usual to supply the words.

A statute ought to be so construed that, if it can be prevented, no clause, sentence or word shall be superfluous, void or insignificant.

Though penal laws are to be construed strictly, they are not to be construed so strictly as to defeat the obvious intention of the Legislature.

If words of a statute may be rejected altogether (U. S. v. Stern, 5 Blatchf. 512; Silver v. Ladd, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 219 (19: 188); Reiche v. Smythe, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 162 (20: 566); Ruckmaboye v. Lulloobhoy Mottichund, 8 Moore, P. C. 424), it is not going any farther to allow words to be supplied.

When the intent calls for the presence of certain omitted words, such words are virtually written.

Gwynne v. Burnell, 7 Clark & F. 607.

Almost every word in a language has many different meanings, and no one can tell what a given word in a writing signifies without a knowledge of the context in which that word occurs.

U. S. v. Long, 10 Fed. Rep. 879, cannot stand against the cases referred to in support of the opposite view, to which may be added U. S. v. Baugh, 1 Fed. Rep. 784.

Mr. Benjamin Barker, Jr., for defendant:

No penalty is prescribed for any offense under section 5467, Rev. Stat., except for that of stealing or taking out of a letter its valuable contents by an employé in the postal service.

U. S. v. Long, 10 Fed. Rep. 879.

The etymology of the language of section 8891, Rev. Stat., sustains the defendant's position; "although" is the synonym for "notwithstanding," and is used to bring the adversative proposition into the greater prominence.

Webster's Dict.; Ogilvie's New Imperial Dict.; Soule, English Synonyms.

The language used by Congress in the sections under consideration must be deemed to be the legislative declaration of the statute law on the subjects which they embraced, and when its meaning is plain the courts cannot look to the statutes which have been revised to see if Congress erred in this revision.

U. S. v. Bowen, 100 U. S. 513 (25: 632); Victor v. Arthur, 104 U. S. 498 (26: 633).

The doctrine is fundamental in English and American law that there can be no constructive offenses; that before a man can be punished his case must be plainly and unmistakably within the statute, and if there be any fair doubt whether the statute embraces it, that doubt is to be resolved in favor of the accused.

U. S. v. Morris, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 464 (10: 543); U. S. v. Willberger, 18 U. S. 5 Wheat. 76 (5: 87); U. S. v. Sheldon, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 119 (4: 199); 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, §§ 184, 145.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant, an employé in the post-office at New York, was found guilty of embezzling a letter containing an article of value on an indictment under section 5467 of the Revised Statutes. A hearing on motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment before the circuit judge of the Second Circuit and the district judge, holding the court, resulted in a division of opinion upon the following questions, which were certified to this court:

"1. Whether an offense against the United States under section 5467, Revised Statutes, is charged in either the first or the third count of the indictment?"

"2. Whether the embezzlement by a person employed in a department of the postal service of a letter intended to be conveyed by mail and containing an article of value, which shall have come into the possession of such person, is made an offense against the United States by § 5467 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and whether any penalty is prescribed for such embezzlement by said section?"

Section 5467 is as follows:

"Any person employed in any department of the postal service who shall secrete, embezzle or destroy any letter, packet, bag or mail of letters intrusted to him, or which shall come into his possession, and which was intended to be conveyed by mail, or carried or delivered by any mail carrier, mail messenger, route agent, letter-carrier or other person employed in any department of the postal service, or forwarded through or delivered from any post-office or branch post-office established by authority of the Postmaster-General, and which shall contain any note, bond, draft, check, warrant, revenue stamp, postage stamp, stamped envelope, postal card, money order, certificate of stock or other pecuniary obligation or security of the government, or of any officer or fiscal agent thereof, of any description whatever; any bank-note, bank post-bill, bill of exchange or note of assignment of stock in the funds; any letter of attorney for receiving annuities or dividends, selling stock in the funds or collecting the interest thereof; any letter of credit, note, bond, warrant, draft, bill, promissory note, covenant, contract or agreement whatsoever, for or relating to the payment of money, or the delivery of any article of value, or the performance of any act, matter or thing; any receipt, release, acquittance or discharge of or from any debt, covenant or demand, or any part thereof; any copy of the record of any judgment or decree in any court of law or chancery or any execution which may have issued thereon; any copy of any other record, or any other article of value, or writing representing the same; any such person who shall steal or take any of the things aforesaid out of any letter, packet, bag or mail of letters which shall have come into his possession, either in the regular course of his official duties or in any other manner whatever, and provided the same shall not have been delivered to the party to whom it is directed, shall be punishable by imprisonment at hard labor for not less than one year nor more than five years."

containing any of the articles named, or any other article of value, and that the only offense punishable under the section is that of stealing or taking any of the things aforesaid "out of any letter, packet, bag or mail of letters." As secreting, embezzling or destroying letters, etc., containing articles of value, are plainly grave offenses, and are described in the section with particularity, the intention to impose a penalty on their commission cannot reasonably be denied, and although the apparent grammatical construction might be otherwise, the true meaning, if clearly ascertained, ought to prevail. If there be any ambiguity in section 5467, inasmuch as it is a section of the Revised Statutes, which are merely a compilation of the statutes of the United States, revised, simplified, arranged and consolidated, resort may be had to the original Statute from which this section was taken, to ascertain what, if any, change of phraseology there is and whether such change should be construed as changing the law. United States v. Bowen, 100 U. S. 508, 518 [25: 631, 632]; United States v. Hirsch, 100 U. S. 33 [25: 539]; Myer v. Western Car Co. 102 U. S. 1, 11 [26: 59, 60]. And it is said that this is especially so where the Act authorizing the revision directs marginal references, as is the case here. 19 Stat. chap. 82, § 2, p. 268; Endlich on Int. Statutes, § 51. Accordingly, we find that this section took the place of section 279 of the Act of June 8, 1872 (17 Stat. 818), which reads as follows:

"That any person employed in any department of the postal service who shall secrete, embezzle or destroy any letter, packet, bag or mail of letters intrusted to him, or which shall come into his possession, and which was intended to be conveyed by mail, or carried or delivered by any mail-carrier, mail-messenger, route-agent, letter-carrier or other person employed in any department of the postal service, or forwarded through or delivered from any post-office or branch post-office established by authority of the Postmaster-General, and which shall contain any note, bond, draft, check, warrant, revenue-stamp, postage-stamp, stamped envelope, postal card, money-order, certificate of stock or other pecuniary obligation or security of the government, or of any officer or fiscal agent thereof, of any description whatever; any bank-note, bank post-bill, bill of exchange or note of assignment of stock in the funds; any letter of attorney for receiving annuities or dividends, selling stock in the funds or collecting the interest thereof; any letter of credit, note, bond, warrant, draft, bill, promissory note, covenant, contract or agreement, whatsoever, for or relating to the payment of money, or the delivery of any article of value, or the performance of any act, matter or thing; any receipt, release, acquittance or discharge of or from any debt, covenant or demand, or any part thereof; any copy of the record of any judgment or decree in any court of law or chancery, or any execution which may have issued thereon; any copy of any other record, or any other article of value, or writing representing the same; any such person who shall steal or take any of the things aforesaid out of any letter, packet, bag or mail of letters which shall have come into his possession, either in the regular course of his official duties, or in any other manner whatever, and provided the same shall not have been delivered to the party to whom it is directed, every such person shall, on conviction thereof, for every such offense, be imprisoned at hard labor not less than one nor more than five years."

The words at the close of the section, "every such person shall on conviction thereof, for every such offense, be imprisoned," are omitted in the revised section, and the question is whether that change works the change in the law contended for. It will be perceived that if the word "or," or the word "and," were supplied before the words "any such person who shall steal," etc., as having been omitted by way of ellipsis, a course often pursued, the objection would have nothing to rest on. But we do not think the supplying of any word is necessary. If the comma after the word "directed," in the third line from the close of the section as it appears in the Revised Statutes, be treated as a semicolon, the result is the same, and obviates any uncertainty in the matter. For the purpose of arriving at the true meaning of a statute, courts read with such stops as are manifestly required. Hammock v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co. 105 U. S. 77, 84 [26: 1111, 1118]; United States v. Isham, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 496 [21: 728].

As contended on behalf of the defendant, there can be no constructive offenses, and before a man can be punished, his case must be plainly and unmistakably within the statute. But though penal laws are to be construed strictly, yet the intention of the Legislature must govern in the construction of penal as well as other statutes, and they are not to be construed so strictly as to defeat the obvious intention of the Legislature. United States v. Wittberger, 18 U. S. 5 Wheat. 76 [5: 37]; United States v. Morris, 89 U. S. 14 Pet. 464 [10: 548]; American Fur Co. v. United States, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 358, 367 [7: 450, 453].

"It appears to me," said Mr. Justice Story, in United States v. Winn, 8 Sumn. 209, 211, "that the proper course, in all these cases, is to search out and follow the true intent of the Legislature, and to adopt that sense of the words which harmonizes best with the context, and promotes in the fullest manner the apparent policy and objects of the Legislature."

To the same effect is the statement of Mr. Sedgwick, in his work on Statutory and Constitutional Law (2d ed.) 282: "The rule that statutes of this class are to be construed strictly is far from being a rigid or unbending one; or rather, it has in modern times been so modified and explained away as to mean little more than that penal provisions, like all others, are to be fairly construed according to the legislative intent as expressed in the enactment; the courts refusing, on the one hand, to extend the punishment to cases which are not clearly embraced in them, and, on the other, equally refusing, by any mere verbal nicety, forced construction or equitable interpretation, to exonerate parties plainly within their scope."

This passage is quoted by Baron Bramwell, in Atty. Gen. v. Sillem, 2 Hurl. & C. 532, as one "in which good sense, force and propriety of language are equally conspicuous; and which is amply borne out by the authorities, English and American, which he cites." Foley v. Fletcher, 28 L. J. N. S. Exch. 106; Nicholson v. Fields, 31 L. J. N. S. Exch. 233; Hardcastle on Statutory Law, p. 251.

And the reason for the less rigorous application of the rule is well given in Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes (2d ed.) p. 818, thus:

"The rule which requires that penal and some other statutes shall be construed strictly was more rigorously applied in former times, when the number of capital offenses was one hundred and sixty or more; when it was still punishable with death to cut down a cherry-tree in an orchard, or to be seen for a month in the company of gipsies. But it has lost much of its force and importance in recent times, since it has become more and more generally recognized that the paramount duty of the judicial interpreter is to put upon the language of the Legislature, honestly and faithfully, its plain and rational meaning, and to promote its object. It was founded, however, on the tenderness of the law for the rights of individuals, and on the sound principle that it is for the Legislature, not the court, to define a crime and ordain its punishment."

We entertain no doubt that two classes of offenses were intended to be created by section 5467, one relating to the embezzlement of letters, etc., and the other to stealing the contents, and that this conclusion is not reached in violation of any rule of construction applicable to penal statutes.

But it is said that the offense of embezzling a letter is covered by section 3891 of the Revised Statutes, and that of abstracting its valuable contents by section 5467, and hence the latter was intended to be confined to stealing the contents and should not be held to embrace secreting, embezzling or destroying the letter, which might contain nothing of value.

Section 3891 is as follows:

"Any person employed in any department of the postal service, who shall unlawfully detain, delay or open any letter, packet, bag or mail of letters intrusted to him, or which has come into his possession, and which was intended to be conveyed by mail, or carried or delivered by any mail-carrier, mail-messenger, route-agent, letter-carrier or other person employed in any department of the postal service, or forwarded through or delivered from any post-office or branch post-office established by authority of the Postmaster-General, or who shall secrete, embezzle or destroy any such letter, packet, bag or mail of letters, although it does not contain any security for or assurance relating to money or other thing of value, shall be punishable by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both."

This section is based on section 146 of the Act of June 8, 1872 (17 Stat. 802), which reads thus:

"That any person employed in any department of the postal service, who shall unlawfully detain, delay or open any letter, packet, bag or mail of letters intrusted to him, or which shall have come into his possession, and which was intended to be conveyed by mail, or carried or delivered by any mail-carrier, mail-messenger, route-agent, letter-carrier or other person employed in any department of the postal service, or forwarded through or delivered from any post-office or branch post-office established by authority of the Postmaster-General; any such person who shall secrete, embezzle or destroy any such letter, packet, bag or mail of letters, as aforesaid, which shall not contain any security for or assurance relating to money or other thing of value, every such person shall, on conviction thereof, for every such offense, forfeit and pay a penalty of not exceeding five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court."

The contention is that the embezzlement of a letter is punishable only under section 8891, whether it does or does not contain a thing of value; that if it does the offender is not liable under section 5467, unless he steals it; and that this is a reasonable and just construction, as the letter may have been taken without intention to abstract the article, and indeed without suspicion of the contents until the interior is explored. And it is urged that as section 146 of the Act of June 8, 1872, expressly provided a penalty for the embezzlement of a letter, "which shall not contain" anything of value, and its substitute, section 8891, uses the language, "although it does not contain" anything of value, the latter section has been thereby broadened so as to punish the offense whether the letter contains an article of value or not. This view would require us to hold that the intention was to do away with the long-observed distinction between embezzling letters containing valuable matter and those which do not, and to absolve the culprit from liability for all the consequences of his unlawful act, notwithstanding the offenses of secreting, embezzling or destroying letters of the first class are carefully defined. If section 8891 covers the embezzlement of all letters and mail matter, no reason for the larger part of section 5467 can be perceived. The construction contended for is inadmissible.

We concur with counsel for the government, that as sections 146 and 279 of the Act of June 8, 1872, are to be considered together, so are sections 8891 and 5467, and that the offenses of secreting, embezzling or destroying mail matter not containing articles of value are punishable under the one, and containing such articles under the other. We are unable to find any sound reason for the conclusion that Congress intended to substitute for "imprisonment at hard labor for not less than one year nor more than five years," the penalty denounced by section 279 and carried into section 5467, in respect to the embezzlement of mail matter containing articles of value, "a fine of not more than five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both," the punishment for embezzling mail matter not containing such articles.

Similar views as to section 5467 were expressed by Judge Benedict in United States v. Pelletreau, 14 Blatchf. 126, and United States v. Jenther, 18 Blatchf. 835; and by Judge Brewer as to section 5469, in United States v. Falkenhainer, 21 Fed. Rep. 624. Contra, United States v. Long, 10 Fed. Rep. 879.

The first question certified is in a form frequently disapproved of. Dublin Trop. v. Milford Sav. Inst. 128 U. S. 510, 514 [82: 533, 534]; United States v. Northway, 120 U. S. 827 [80: 664]; United States v. Hall, 181 U. S. 50 [88: 97]. The second question is answered in the affirmative and it will be so certified.

ADDRESS

COMMEMORATION OF THE INAUGURATION OF

GEORGE WASHINGTON

AS

FIRST PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

DELIVERED BEFORE THE

TWO HOUSES OF CONGRESS,

DECEMBER 11, 1889,

BY

MELVILLE WESTON FULLER, LL. D.,

CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE UNITED STATES.

MR. PRESIDENT, MR. SPEAKER, AND GENTLEMEN OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

By the terms of that section of the Act of Congress under which we have assembled in further commemoration of the historic event of the inauguration of the first President of the United States, George Washington, the 80th of April, A. D. 1889, was declared a national holiday, and in the noble city where that event took place its centennial anniversary has been celebrated with a magnificence of speech and song, of multitudinous assembly, and of naval, military and civic display, accompanied by every manifestation of deep love of country, of profound devotion to its institutions and of intense appreciation of the virtues and services of that illustrious man, whose assumption of the chief magistracy gave the assurance of the successful setting in motion of the new government.

Nothing on the occasion of that celebration could be more full of encouragement and hope than the testimony so overwhelmingly given that Washington still remained first in the hearts of his countrymen, and that the example afforded by his career was still cherished as furnishing that guide of public conduct which had kept and would keep the nation upon the path of glory for itself and of happiness for its people.

The majestic story of that life—whether told in the pages of Marshall or Sparks, of Irving or Bancroft, or through the eloquent utterances of Ames or Webster, or Everett or Winthrop, or the matchless poetry of Lowell or the verse of Byron—never grows old.

We love to hear again what the great Frederick and Napoleon, what Erskine and Fox and Brougham and Talleyrand and Fontanes and Guizot said of him, and how crape enshrouded the standards of France, and the flags upon the victorious ships of England fell fluttering to half-mast at the tidings of his death.

The passage of the century has not in the slightest degree impaired the irresistible charm; and whatever doubts or fears assail us in the turmoil of our impetuous national life, that story comes to console and to strengthen, like the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.

Washington had become first in war, not so much by reason of victories over the enemy, though he had won such, or of success in strategy, though that had been his, as of the triumphs of a constancy which no reverse, no hardship, no incompetency, no treachery could shake or overcome.

And because the people comprehended the greatness of their leader and recognized in him an entire absence of personal ambition, an absolute obedience to convictions of duty, an unaffected love of country, of themselves and of mankind, he had become first in the hearts of his countrymen.

Because thus first, he was to become first in peace, by bringing to the charge of the practical working of the system he had participated in creating, on behalf of the people whose independence he had achieved, the same serene judgment, the same sagacity, the same patience, the same sense of duty, the same far-sighted comprehension of the end to be attained, that had marked his career from its beginning.

From the time he assumed command, he had given up all idea of accommodation, and believed that there was no middle ground between subjugation and complete independence, and that independence the independence of a nation.

He had demanded national action in respect of the army; he had urged, but a few weeks after Bunker Hill, the creation of a federal court with jurisdiction co-extensive with the Colonies; he had during the war repeatedly pressed home his deep conviction of the indispensability of a strong central government, and particularly at its close, in his circular to the governors of the States and his farewell to his comrades. He had advocated the promotion of commercial intercourse with the rising world of the west, so that its people might be bound to those of the seaboard by a chain that could never be broken. Appreciating the vital importance of territorial influences to the political life of a commonwealth, he had approved the cessions by the landed States, none more significant than that by his own, and had made the profound suggestion—which was acted on—of a line of conduct proper to be observed for the government of the citizens of America in their settlement of the western country which involved the assertion of the sovereign right of eminent domain. He had advised the commissioners of Virginia and Maryland, in consultation at Mount Vernon in relation to the navigation of the Potomac, to recommend a uniform currency and a uniform system of commercial regulations, and this led to the calling of the conference of commissioners of the thirteen States. At the proper moment he had thrown his immense personal influence in favor of the convention and secured the ratification of the Constitution.

It remained for him to crown his labors by demonstrating in their administration the value of the institutions whose establishment had been so long the object of his desire.

"It is already beyond doubt," wrote Count Moustier, in June, 1789, "that in spite of the asserted beauty of the plan which has been adopted, it would have been necessary to renounce its introduction if the same man who presided over its formation had not been placed at the head of the enterprise. The extreme confidence in his patriotism, his integrity and his intelligence forms to-day its principal support."

There were obvious difficulties surrounding the first President. Eleven States had ratified, but the assent of some had been secured only after strenuous exertion, considerable delay, and upon close votes.

So slowly did the new government get under way that the first Wednesday of March, the day designated for the Senate and House to assemble, came and went, and it was not until the first of April that the House obtained a quorum, and not until the 6th that the electoral vote was counted in joint convention.

An opposition so intense and bitter as that which had existed to the adoption of the Constitution could not readily die out, and the antagonisms which lay at its base were as old as human nature.

Jealousies existed between the smaller and the larger, between the agricultural and the commercial States, and these were rendered the keener by the rivalries of personal ambition.

Those who admired the theories of the French philosophical school and those who preferred the British model could not readily harmonize their differences, while the enthusiastic believers in the capacity of man for self-government denounced the more conservative for doubting the extent of the reliance which could be placed upon it.

The fear of arbitrary power took particular form in reference to the presidential office, which had been fashioned in view of the personal government of George the Third, rather than on the type of monarchy of the English system as it was in principle, and as it is in fact.

And this fear was indulged notwithstanding the frequency of elections, since no restriction as to re-eligibility was imposed upon the incumbent.

But no fear, no jealousy, could be entertained of him who had indignantly repelled the suggestion of the bestowal of kingly power; who had unsheathed the sword with reluctance and laid it down with joy; who had never sought official position, but accepted public office as a public trust, in deference to so unanimous a demand for his services as to convince him of their necessity; whose patriotism embraced the whole country, the future grandeur of which his prescience foresaw.

Nevertheless, while there could be no personal opposition to the unanimous choice of the people, and while his availability at the crisis was one of those providential blessings which, in other instances, he had so often insisted had been bestowed upon the nation, the fact remained that the situation was full of trial and danger, and demanded the application of the highest order of statesmanship.

Nor are we left to conjecture Washington's feelings in this regard.

Indeed, it may be said that at every period of his public life, though he possessed the talent for silence and did his work generally with closed lips, yet it is always possible to gather from his remarkable letters the line of his thought upon current affairs, and his inmost hopes, fears and aspirations as to the public weal.

Take for illustration that, in which, on the 9th of January, 1790, little more than eight months after his inauguration, he says:—

"The establishment of our new government seemed to be the last great experiment for promoting human happiness by a reasonable compact in civil society. It was to be, in the first instance, in a considerable degree a government of accommodation as well as a government of laws. Much was to be done by prudence, much by conciliation, much by firmness. Few, who are not philosophical spectators, can realize the difficult and delicate part which a man in my situation had to act. All see and most admire the glare which hovers round the external happiness of elevated office. To me there is nothing in it beyond the lustre which may be reflected from its connection with a power of promoting human felicity. In our progress towards political happiness my station is new, and, if I may use the expression, I walk on untrodden ground. There is scarcely an action the motive of which may not be subject to a double interpretation. There is scarcely any part of my conduct which may not hereafter be drawn into precedent. If, after all my honorable and faithful endeavors to advance the felicity of my country and mankind, I may indulge a hope that my labors have not been altogether without success, it will be the only compensation I can receive in the closing scenes of life."

Here he admits with a certain suppressed sadness that he realizes that private life has ceased to exist for him, and that from his previous participation in public affairs, the exalted character of the new office and the fact that he is the first to fill it, his every act and word thereafter may be referred to in guidance or control of others, and as bearing upon the nature of the government of which he was the head. It is borne in upon him that in this instance, in a greater degree than ever before, his conduct is to become an historical example. Questions of etiquette, questions pertaining to his daily life, unimportant in themselves, cease to be so under the new conditions, and this interruption of the domestic tenor of his way, to which he was of choice and ardently attached, finds no compensation in the gratification of a morbid hunger and thirst for applause, whether of the few or of the many.

But in the consciousness of having contributed to the advancement of the felicity of his country and of mankind lies the true reward for these renewed labors.

The promotion of human happiness was the key-note of the century within which Washington's life was comprised.

It was the century of Franklin and Turgot; of Montesquieu and Voltaire and Rousseau; of Frederick the Great and Joseph the Second; of Pitt and Fox and Burke and Grattan; of Burns and Cowper and Gray; of Goethe and Kant; of Priestly and Hume and Adam Smith; of Wesley and Whitefield and Howard, as well as of the long line of statesmen and soldiers, and voyagers over every sea; of poets and artists and essayists and encyclopedists and romancers, which adorned it.

It was the century of men like Condorcet, who, outlawed and condemned by a revolutionary tribunal, the outcome of popular excesses, calmly sat down, in hiding, to compose his work upon the progress of the human mind.

It was a century instinct with the recognition of the human soul in every human being, and alive with aspirations for universal brotherhood.

With this general longing for the elevation of mankind Washington sympathized, and in expressing a hearty desire for the rooting out of slavery considered this not only essential to the perpetuation of the Union, but desirable on the score of human dignity. Nevertheless, with the calm reason in reference to government, of the race from which he sprang, he regarded the promotion of human happiness as to be best secured by a reasonable compact in civil society, and that established by the Federal Constitution as the last great experiment to that end.

Washington and his colleagues were familiar with prior forms of government and their operation, and with the speculations of the writers upon that subject. They were conversant with the course of the Revolution of 1688, the then triumph of public opinion, and the literature of that period. They accepted the thesis of Locke, that, as the true end of government is the mutual preservation of the lives, liberties and estates of the people, a government which invades these rights is guilty of a breach of trust, and can lawfully be set aside; and they were persuaded of the soundness of the views of Montesquieu, that the distribution of powers is necessary to political liberty, which can only exist when power is not abused, and in order that power may not be abused it must be so distributed that power shall check power.

It is only necessary to consult the pages of The Federalist—that incomparable work on the principles of free government—to understand the acquaintance of American statesmen with preceding governmental systems, ancient and modern, and to comprehend that the Constitution was the result, not of a desire for novelty, but of the effort to gather the fruit of that growth which, having its roots in the past, could yield in the present and give promise for the future.

The colonists possessed practically a common nationality, and took by inheritance certain fundamental ideas upon the development of which their growth had proceeded. Self-government by local subdivisions, a legislative body of two houses, an executive head, a distinctive judiciary, constituted the governmental methods.

Magna Charta, the Petition and Declaration of Rights, the Habeas Corpus Act, the Act of Settlement, all the muniments of English liberty, were theirs, and the New England Confederation of 1648, the schemes of union of 1754 and 1765, the revolutionary Congress, the Articles of Confederation, the colonial charters and constitutions furnished a vast treasury of experience upon which they drew.

Their work in relation to what had gone before was in truth but in maintenance of that continuity of which Hooker speaks: "We were then alive in our predecessors and they in their successors do live still." They did not seek to build upon the ruins of older institutions, but to develop from them a nobler, broader and more lasting structure; and in effecting this upon so vast a scale and under conditions so widely different from the past, the immortal instrument was indeed the product of consummate statesmanship.

Of the future greatness of the new nation Washington had no doubt. He saw, as if face to face, that continental domain which glimmered to others as through a glass darkly.

The great west was no sealed book to him, and no one knew better than he that no foreign power could long control the flow of the Father of Waters to the Gulf.

He is said to have lacked imagination, and if the exhilaration of the poet, the mystic or the seer is meant, this may be true.

His mind was not given to indulgence in dreams of ideal commonwealths like the republic of Plato or of Cicero, the City of God of Augustine, or the Utopia of Sir Thomas

APPENDIX IV.

More, but it grasped the mighty fact of the empire of the future, and acted in obedience to the heavenly vision.

But the question was, Could that empire be realized and controlled by the people within its vast boundaries in the exercise of self-government?

Could the conception of a central government, operating directly upon citizens, who at the same time were subject to the jurisdiction of their several States, be carried into practical working operation so as to reconcile imperial sway with local independence?

Would a scheme work which was partly national and partly federal, and which aimed at unity as well as union?

And could the rule of the majority be subjected with binding force to such restraints through a system by representation, that of a republic rather than that of a pure democracy, that the violence of faction could not operate in the long run to defeat a common government by the many, throughout so immense an area?

Could the restraints essential to the preservation of society, the equilibrium between progress and order, be so guarded as to allow of that sober second thought which would secure their observance, and thus the liberty and happiness of the people and the enduring progress of humanity?

While the general genius of the government was thoroughly permeated with the ideas of freedom in obedience, yet time was needed to commend the form in which it was for the future to exert itself.

Hence administration in the first instance required accommodation as well as adherence to the letter, and prudence and conciliation as well as firmness.

The Cabinet of the first President illustrates his sense of the nature of the exigency.

All its members were friends and supporters of the Constitution, but possessed of widely different views as to the scope of its powers and the probabilities of its successful operation in the shape it then bore.

Between Jefferson and Hamilton there seemed to be a great gulf fixed, yet a common patriotism bridged it, and a common purpose enabled them for these critical years to act together. And this was rendered possible by the fact that the leadership of Washington afforded a common ground upon which every lover of a united country could stand. And as the first four years were nearing their close, Hamilton and Jefferson severally urged Washington to consent to remain at the helm for four years longer, that the government might acquire additional firmness and strength before being subjected to the strain of the contention of parties.

Undoubtedly Hamilton desired this also, because of nearer coincidence of thought on some questions involving serious difference of opinion, but both concurred in urging it upon the ground that the confidence of the whole Union was centered in Washington, and his being at the helm would be more than an answer to every argument which could be used to alarm and lead the people in any quarter into violence or secession.

Appointments to the supreme bench involved less reason for accommodation, but equal prudence and sagacity.

The great part which that tribunal was to play in the development of our institutions was yet to come, but the importance of that branch of the government to which was committed the ultimate interpretation of the Constitution was appreciated by Washington, who characterized it as the keystone of the political fabric.

To the headship of the court, Washington called the pure and great-minded Jay of New York, and associated with him John Rutledge of South Carolina, who, from the Stamp-Act Congress of 1765, had borne a conspicuous part in the history of the country and of his State; James Wilson of Pennsylvania, who, like Rutledge, had been prominent in the Continental Congress and in the federal convention, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and one of the most forcible, acute and learned debaters on behalf of the Constitution, as the records of the federal and his state conventions show; Cushing, chief justice of Massachusetts, experienced in judicial station, and the only person holding office under the Crown who adhered to his country in the Revolution; Harrison of Maryland, Washington's well-known secretary; Blair of Virginia, a judge of its court of appeals, and one of Washington's fellow-members in the convention; and in place of Rutledge and Harrison, who preferred the highest judicial positions in their own States, Thomas Johnson of Maryland and James Iredell of North Carolina.

It will be perceived that the distribution was made with tact, and the selections with consummate wisdom.

The part the appointees had taken in the cause of the country, and especially in laying the foundations of the political edifice, their eminent qualifications and recognized integrity, commended the court to the confidence of the people, and gave assurance that this great department would be so administered as to effectuate the purposes for which it had been created.

As to appointments generally, he did not recognize the rule of party rewards for party work, although, when party opposition became clearly defined, he wrote Pickering that to "bring a man into any office of consequence knowingly, whose political tenets are adverse to the measures which the general government is pursuing," would be, in his opinion, "a sort of political suicide." To integrity and capacity, as qualifications for high civil office, he added that of "marked eminence before the country, not only as the more likely to be serviceable, but because the public will more readily trust them." As in appointments, so in the conduct of affairs, prudence, conciliation and accommodation carried the experiment successfully along, while firmness in essentials was equally present, as when, at a later day, the suppression of the whiskey rebellion and the maintenance of neutrality in the war between France and England gave information at home that there existed a central government strong enough to suppress domestic insurrection, and abroad, that a new and self-reliant power had been born into the family of nations.

The course taken in all matters, whether great or small, was the result of careful consideration and the exercise of deliberate judgment as to the effect of what was done, or forbore to be done, upon the success of the newly constructed fabric. Thus, the regulation of official behavior was deemed a matter of such consequence, that Adams, Jay, Hamilton and Madison were consulted upon it, for although republican simplicity had been substituted for monarchy and titles, and was held inconsistent with concession of superiority by reason of occupancy of official station, yet the transition could not be violently made, and the people were, in any event, entitled to expect their agents to sustain with dignity the high positions to which they had been called.

During the entire presidency of Washington, upon the details of which it is impracticable here to dwell, time for solidification was the dominant thought. The infant giant could defend himself even in his cradle; but to become the Colossus of Washington's hopes, the gristle must have opportunity to harden.

After more than seven years of devotion to the interests committed to his charge and intense watchfulness over the adjustment and working of the machinery of the new system, having determined upon his own retirement, thereby practically assigning a limit to the period during which the office could with propriety be occupied by his successors, still regarding the problem as not solved, and still anxiously desiring to contribute to the last to the welfare of the constant object of his veneration and love, he gives to his countrymen in the farewell of "an old and affectionate friend," the results of his observations and of his reflections on the operation of the great scheme he had assisted in creating and had so far commended to the people by his administration of its provisions.

Punctilious as he was in official observances, and dear as his home and his own State were to him, this address was one that rose above home, and State, and official place, that brought him near, not simply to the people to whom it was immediately directed, but to that great coming multitude whom no man could number, and towards which he felt the pathetic attachment of a noble and prophetic soul. And so he dates it, not from Mount Vernon nor from his official residence, but from the "United States."

Hamilton, Madison and Jay had, in the series of essays in advocacy of the Constitution, largely aided in bringing about its ratification, and displayed wonderful comprehensiveness of view, depth of wisdom and sagacity of reflection in their treatment of the topics involved. Throughout Washington's administration they had to the utmost assisted in the successful carrying on of the government, in the Cabinet, in Congress, upon the bench, or in diplomatic station, and to them, as tried and true friends and men of a statesmanship as broad as the country, Washington turned at one time and another for advice in the preparation of these closing words.

Notwithstanding that innate modesty which had always induced a certain real diffidence in assuming station, he was conscious of his position as founder of the state; he felt that every utterance in this closing benediction would be cherished by coming generations as disinterested advice, based on experience and knowledge and illuminated by the sincerest affection, and he invited the careful scrutiny of his friends that it might "be handed to the public in an honest, unaffected, simple garb." But the work was his own, as all his work was. The virtue went out of him, even when he used the hand of another.

If we turn to this remarkable document and compare the line of conduct therein recommended with the course of events during the century—the advice given with the results of experience—we are amazed at the wonderful sagacity and precision with which it lays down the general principles through whose application the safety and prosperity of the republic have been secured. To cherish the public credit and promote religion, morality and education were obvious recommendations. Economy in public expense, vigorous exertion to discharge debt unavoidably occasioned, acquiescence in necessary taxation, and candid construction of governmental action in the selection of its proper objects, were all parts of the first of these. The increase of net ordinary expenditures from three millions to two hundred and sixty-eight millions of dollars, and of net ordinary receipts from four and one-half to three hundred and eighty millions of dollars, renders the practice of economy, as contradistinguished from wastefulness, as commendable to-day as then, but it must be a judicious economy; for, as Washington said, timely disbursements frequently prevent much larger.

The extinction of the public debt at one time, and the marvelous reduction, within a quarter of a century of its creation, of a later public debt of more than twenty-five hundred millions of dollars, demonstrate practical adherence to the rule laid down. It is true that the great material prosperity which has attended our growth has enabled us to meet an enormous burden of taxation with comparative ease, but it is nevertheless also true that the general judgment has never wavered upon the question of the sacred observance of plighted faith; and if at any moment the removal of the bars designed to imprison the powerful giant of a paper currency seemed to imperil the preservation of the public honor, the sturdy common sense of the people has checked through their representatives the dangerous tendency before it has gone too far.

Education was one of the two hooks (the other was local self-government) upon which the continuance of republican government was considered as absolutely hanging.

The action of the Continental Congress in respect to the western territory was next in importance to that on independence and union. Apart from its political significance we recall the familiar fact that one section out of every township was reserved under the Ordinances of 1785 and 1787 for the maintenance of schools, because religion, morality and knowledge were considered essential to good government and the happiness of mankind. The one section has been made two, and many millions of acres have been granted for the endowment of universities, of normal, scientific and mining schools, and institutions for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, including from three hundred and fifty to four hundred and fifty thousand acres for educational and charitable institutions, to each of the new States recently admitted, by an Act appropriately passed into law on the birthday of Washington. A thousand universities, colleges and institutions of learning, twelve millions of children attending two hundred thousand public schools, with three hundred and sixty thousand teachers, at an expenditure of one hundred and twenty-five millions and with property worth two hundred millions, and sixty-two million dollars in private benefactions for education in the decade of the last census, testify that the importance of education is not under-estimated in a country whose institutions are dependent upon the intelligence of the people.

Washington insists that national morality cannot prevail in exclusion of religious principle, though the influence of refined education on minds of a peculiar structure may have induced an opposite conclusion.

History accords with this view. Plutarch said, "You may travel over the world and you may find cities without walls, without king, without mint, without theatre or gymnasium, but you will never find a city without God, without prayer, without oracle, without sacrifice;" and the eighteen centuries since his day confirm the truth of his words.

"Take from me," said Bismarck, "my faith in a divine order which has destined this German nation for something good and great, and you take from me my fatherland."

Washington declares that "the mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and cherish religion and morality as the firmest props of the duties of men and citizens." He did not mean that the value of trust and faith has no relation to the reality of the objects of that trust and faith, nor that those to whom he referred should indulge in religious observances as mere mummeries to deceive, while smiling among themselves, as Cicero with his fellow-augurs, nor that faith should be betrayed by accommodation to superstition, as in the action of the town clerk of Ephesus, but he demanded that they should recognize in fact the indispensability of these supports of political prosperity.

And here again the answer of the century's watchman tells that the night is passing.

Crime, drunkenness, pauperism have steadily decreased in proportion as population has increased, philanthropic agencies have multiplied, moral sensitiveness has become keener, and higher standards of personal and official conduct have come to be required, while at the same time the statistics of religious progress exhibit wonderful and most gratifying results.

Washington had never permitted his public action to be influenced by personal affection or personal hostility, and in urging the avoidance of political connections or personal alliances with any portion of the foreign world, he characteristically condemned indulgence in an inveterate antipathy towards particular nations and a passionate attachment for others, while observing good faith and justice towards all.

No reason existed for becoming implicated in the ordinary vicissitudes of the politics of Europe, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities. Intervention meant war, not arbitration; the assumption of obligation meant force, not words. No field was to be opened here for foreign intrigues, and no necessity created here for standing armies and the domination of the civil by the military authority.

So scrupulous was Washington's abstinence from the slightest appearance of interference, that, notwithstanding his tender friendship for La Fayette, he would not make official application for his release from Olmutz. So absolute was his conviction that this country must not become a make-weight in Europe's balances of power, that he sternly held it to neutrality under circumstances which would have rendered it impossible for any other man to do so. Such has been the policy unchangeably pursued, but it has not required the concealment of our sympathy with all who have wished to put American institutional ideas into practical operation, or our confidence in their ultimate prevalence. Nor has the rule prevented the republic from the declaration that it should take its own course in case of the interference by other nations with the primary interests of America.

In the lapse of years international relations have been constantly assuming larger importance with the growth of the country and the world and the increasing nearness of intercommunication. We are justified in claiming that the delicate and difficult function of government involved has been from the first discharged in so admirable a manner that the solution of the grave questions of the future may be awaited without anxiety.

It is matter of congratulation that the first year of our second century witnesses the representatives of the three Americas engaged in the effort to increase the facilities of commercial intercourse, "consulting the natural course of things, diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of intercourse, but forcing nothing," success in which must knit closer the ties of fraternal friendship, and bring the peoples of the two American continents into harmonious control of the hemisphere.

The course of events has equally shown the profound wisdom of the propositions of the Farewell Address bearing directly on the form of government delineated in the Federal Constitution.

First of these is the necessity of the preservation of the distribution of powers, and of resistance to any encroachment by one department upon another.

The executive power was vested in the President, but he had a voting power in the right to veto, and the power of initiation as to treaties, which became binding with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The interposition of the latter was also permitted by the requisition of assent in the confirmation of appointments, and it could sit in judgment on the President if articles of impeachment were presented. In some particulars, therefore, the two departments approached each other in the exercise of functions appropriate to each.

This made it all the more important that there should be no invasion of the one by the other. No effort to diminish the executive authority or to interfere with the exercise of its legitimate discretion has commanded the support of the public voice, and impeachment has not been considered a proper resort to reconcile differences of judgment, however serious.

APPENDIX IV.

The right to initiate and to pass laws having been lodged in Congress, the balance of power was actually there reposed, and the danger of encroachment would naturally present itself from that quarter.

And here the federal judiciary was interposed as a coördinate department, with power to determine when the limitations of the fundamental law were transgressed. Without an exact precedent, the creation of a tribunal possessed of that power was the natural result of the existence of a written constitution; for to leave to the instrumentalities by which governmental power is exercised the determination of boundaries upon it, would dispense with them altogether.

In England the executive and legislative powers are practically vested in Parliament and exercised by the Cabinet, which amounts to a committee of the Commons, acting with the additional power which secret agreement on a given course imparts. The constitution is what Parliament makes it, and the judicial tribunals only interpret and apply the action of that body, being necessarily destitute of the power to hold such action void by reference to any higher law than its own enactments.

Not so with us. Every Act of Congress, every Act of the State Legislatures, every part of the Constitution of any State, if repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, is void, and to be so treated. The supreme court by the decision of cases in which such Acts or provisions are drawn in question, and in the exercise of judicial functions, renders the Constitution in reality as well as in name the supreme law of the land.

Its judgments command the assent of Congress and the Executive, the States and the people, alike, and it is this unique arbitrament that has challenged the admiration of the world.

The court cannot be abolished by Congress, but the number of its judges may be increased, or diminished on the occurrence of vacancies, and so, while its jurisdiction cannot be impaired, the exercise of it may be curtailed.

Nevertheless, no legislation to control it in any way has ever been approved by definite public opinion, and the tribunal remains in the complete discharge of the vital and important functions it was created to perform.

Scrupulously abstaining from the decision of strictly political questions and from the performance of other than judicial duties; never grasping an ungranted jurisdiction and never shrinking from the exercise of that conferred upon it, it commands the reverence of a law-abiding people.

Again, Washington urges not only that his countrymen shall steadily discountenance irregular opposition to the acknowledged authority of the government, and resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, but shall oppose any change in the system except by amendment in the mode provided, particularly warning them, as fearful of objection to the pressure of the government, that the energy of the scheme must not be impaired, as vigor is not only required to manage the common interests throughout so extensive a country, but is necessary to protect liberty itself.

In no part of the Constitution was greater sagacity displayed than in the provision for its amendment. No State, without its consent, could be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate, but otherwise (with an exception now immaterial) the instrument might be amended upon the concurrence of two thirds of both Houses, and the ratification of the Legislatures or conventions of three fourths of the several States, or through a federal convention when applied for by the Legislatures of two thirds of the States, and upon like ratification.

It was designed that the ultimate sovereignty thus reposed should not be called into play, except through this slow and deliberate process, which would give time for mere hypothesis and opinion to exhaust themselves, and the conclusion reached to be the result of gravity of thought and judgment, and of the concurrence of substantially every part of the country.

The first ten Amendments hardly come within the application of the principle, as they were in substance requested by many of the States at the time of ratification. In the Pennsylvania convention, James Wilson declared that the subject of a bill of rights was not mentioned in the constitutional convention until within three days of its adjournment, and even then no direct motion upon the subject was offered; and that such a bill was entirely unnecessary in a government having none but enumerated powers; but Jefferson urged from Paris that a bill of rights was "what the people are entitled to against every government on earth, general or particular," and that one ought to be added, "providing clearly and without the aid of sophism, for freedom of religion, freedom of the press, protection against standing armies, restriction of monopolies, the eternal and unremitting force of the habeas corpus laws and trials by jury in all matters of fact triable by the laws of the land, and not by the laws of nations." This view prevailed, but in order that the affirmance of certain rights might not disparage others or lead to implications in favor of the possession of other powers, it was added that the enumeration of certain rights should not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people, and that the powers not delegated were reserved.

Congress, in the preamble to these Amendments, and Washington, in his inaugural, commend their adoption out of regard for the public harmony and a reverence for the characteristic rights of freemen.

The Eleventh inhibited the extension by construction, in the particular named, of the federal judicial power, and the Twelfth related to matters of detail in the election of President and Vice-President. No one of the twelve was in restraint of state action.

Sixty years elapsed before the ratification of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments. These definitely disposed of the subject of slavery, that Serbonian bog 'twixt the extreme views of the two schools of political thought dividing the country—views which, except for the existence of that institution, might never have been pushed to an extreme, but might have continued peacefully to operate in the production of a golden mean between the absorption of power by the central and its diffusion among the local governments. And by the Fourteenth an additional guaranty was furnished against the arbitrary exercise by the States of the powers of government, unrestrained by the established principles of private rights and distributive justice.

APPENDIX IV.

Undoubtedly the effect of these later Amendments was to increase the power of Congress, but there was no revolutionary change. It is as true of the existing government, as it was of the proposed government, that it must stand or fall with the state governments.

Added provisions for the protection of personal rights involved to that extent additional powers, but the essential elements of the structure remained unchanged.

In other words, while certain obstructions to its working have been removed the clock-work has not been thrown out of gear, but the pendulum continues to swing through its appointed arc and the vast machinery to move noiselessly and easily to and fro, marking the orderly progress of a great people in the achievement of happiness by the exercise of self-government.

But while direct alterations have been few, the fundamental law has been developed in the evolution of national growth, as Washington, indeed, anticipated. "Time and habit," said he, "are at least as necessary to fix the true character of government as of other human institutions;" and "experience is the surest standard by which to fix the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country."

In this he applies the language of Hume, and speaks in the spirit of the observation of Bacon, that "rightly is truth called the daughter of time, not of authority."

Time, habit, experience, legislation, usage may have assisted in expanding the Constitution in the quiet, imperceptible manner in which nature adapts itself to new conditions, though remaining still the same.

Yet its chief growth is to be found in the interpretation of its provisions by the tribunal upon which that delicate and responsible duty was imposed. And in that view what "a debt immense of endless gratitude" is owed to those luminous decisions of John Marshall, which placed the principles of the Constitution upon an impregnable basis and rendered an experimental system permanent.

Renowned and venerable name! It was he who liberated the spirit which lived within the Constitution—the mind infused "through every member of the mighty mass"—so that it might "pervade, sustain and actuate the whole."

The fact that the conclusions reached by the court and set forth by the persuasive and logical reasoning of the great chief justice did not at that moment move in the direction of public opinion, but finally met with the entire approval of the matured judgment of the people, furnishes an impressive illustration of the working of our system of government.

Doubtless, in many instances, the Constitution has been subjected to strains which have tested its elasticity without breaking the texture, but the watchfulness of party has aided to keep the balance true, absolute infraction has been deprecated or denied, and a law-loving and law-abiding people has welcomed the rebound which restored the rigid outline and even tenor of its way.

The departing statesman dwells with insistence, on the grounds both of interest and sensibility, upon the paramount importance of the Union and of that unity of government which makes of those who live under it one people and one nation, and will, he hopes, induce all its citizens, whether by birth or choice, to glory in the name "American."

Here, the ideal which influenced his conduct may be read between the lines—the ideal of a powerful and harmonious people, possessed of freedom because capable of self-restraint, and working out the destinies of an ocean-bound republic, whose example should be a message of glad tidings to all the earth.

And the realization of that ideal involved a patriotism not based upon the dictates of interest, but springing from devotion of the heart, and pride in the object of that devotion.

What Washington desired, as Lodge's fine biography makes entirely clear, was, that the people should become saturated with the principles of national unity and love of country, should possess an "American character," should never forget that they were "Americans." Hence he opposed education abroad, lest our youth might contract principles unfriendly to republican government; and discouraged immigration, except of those who, by "an intermixture with our people," could themselves, or their descendants, "get assimilated to our customs, measures and laws; in a word, soon become one people."

To be an American was to be part and parcel of American ideas, institutions, prosperity and progress. It was to be like-minded with the patriotic leaders who have served the cause of their native or adopted land, from Washington to Lincoln. It was to be convinced of the virtues of republican government as the bulwark of the true and genuine liberties of mankind, which would ultimately transmute suffering through ignorance into happiness through light.

Who would not glory in the name American, when it carries with it such illustrative types as Washington, and Franklin, and Samuel Adams, and Jefferson, and such a type as Lincoln, whose very faults were American, as were the virtues of his sad and heroic soul?

As the lust for domination is in perpetual conflict with the longing to be free, so the tendency to concentration struggles perpetually with the tendency to diffuse.

It is in the maintenance of the equilibrium that the largest liberty consistent with the greatest progress has been found. And this is as true between the States and the federal government as between the individual and the State.

But while the play of the two forces is a natural one, the gravitation is to the centre, with human nature as it is.

The passage of the century, with the vast material development of the country, has brought this strikingly home to us in the increased importance of the federal government in prestige and power as compared with that of the state governments in the time of Washington. Position on the supreme bench or cabinet place might still be declined for personal reasons, but not because of preference for the headship of a state government, or of a state tribunal, and no punctilio would cause the governor of to-day to hesitate upon a question of official etiquette when the President visits a state capital.

Rapidity and ease of communication by railroad, telegraph and post; the handling of the vast income and expenditure of the federal treasury, and the knitting together of the innumerable ties of family, social and business relations, have created a solidarity which demands, in the regulation of commerce, the management of financial affairs and the like, the interposition of federal authority. The national banking system, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Agricultural Department, the Labor and Educational Bureau, the National Board of Health, indicate the drift toward the exertion of the national will, a natural and perhaps inevitable result of that unity which formed the object of Washington's desire.

But what he wished was solidarity without centralization in destruction of local regulation, for it must not be assumed that he did not realize the vital importance of the preservation of local self-government through the States. To realize its great destiny the country must oppose externally a consolidated front and contain within itself a single people only; but popular government must be preserved, and the doubt was whether a common government of the popular form could embrace so large a sphere.

Hence the earnestness with which Washington invoked the spirit of essential unity through pride and affection to move upon the face of the waters. When the new political world had fairly taken form and substance other considerations would resume their due importance. He was profoundly disturbed by the apprehension that different portions of the population might become, through contradictory interests, in effect rival peoples, and the Union be destroyed by the contention for mastery between them. His sagacious mind perceived the danger arising from the social and economic condition produced by an institution with which the framers of the Constitution had found themselves unable to deal, and he deprecated an appeal to the last reason of kings in preservation of one government over our whole domain.

Yet that appeal was fortunately so long delayed that when it came the civil war determined the perpetuity and indissolubility of the Union, without the loss of distinct and individual existence or of the right of self-government by the States.

This conflict demonstrated that no part of the country was destitute of that old fighting spirit, which rouses at the invocation of force through arms, and which long years of prosperity could not weaken or destroy, and, at the same time, that gigantic armies drawn from the ranks of a citizen soldiery, however skilled they may become in the arts of war, on the cessation of hostilities at once resumed the normal cultivation of the arts of peace.

And from an apparent invasion of the carefully constructed scheme to secure popular government, popular government has obtained a wider scope and renewed power, and from an apparent industrial overthrow has come an unexampled industrial development. "Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness."

The waste of war is always rapidly replaced, and in its effect on institutions time may repair its injuries without weakening its benefits.

Is it possible to conceive of a more searching test of the wisdom and lasting quality of our form of government than that applied by the civil war? Is it possible to conceive of a more convincing demonstration than the reconciliation which has followed the conclusion of the struggle, and the complete reinstatement of the system in harmonious operation over the entire national domain? No conquered provinces perpetuated personal animosities and by the fact of their existence, through despotic rule over part, changed the government over all. On the contrary, the States, vital parts of the system, and in whose annihilation the system perishes, resumed the relations temporarily suspended, and the continuance of local self-government on its accustomed course prevented the old connection from carrying with it the bitterness of enforced change. It was the triumph of the machinery that its practical working so speedily assumed its normal movement, substantially uninjured by the convulsion that had shaken it.

And as the wheels within the wheels revolve, the aspiration finds a response in every heart: "Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain that they may live"—live with their reunited brethren, one in the hand of God.

Finally, the country is warned against the baleful effects of the spirit of party as the worst enemy of governments of the popular form.

Franklin wrote that all great affairs are carried on by parties, but that as soon as a party has gained its general point each member becomes intent upon his particular interest; that few in public affairs act from a mere view of the good of their country, and fewer still with a view to the good of mankind. But these observations would, in the light of the history of our country, be regarded as too sweeping, although they suggest grounds for the objection of Washington to the domination of party spirit.

Parties based on different opinions as to the principles on which the government is to be conducted must necessarily exist. To them we look for that activity in the advocacy of opposing views; that watchfulness over the assertion of authority; that keen debate as to the course most conducive to well being, essential to the successful growth of popular institutions. That voice of the people which, when duly given and properly ascertained, directs the action of the state, is largely brought to declare itself through the instrumentality of party. It is this which corrects that general apathy rightly regarded by De Tocqueville as a serious menace to popular government because conducive to its complete surrender to the domination of its agents if they will but relieve responsibility and gratify desire. But if the spirit of party is so extreme that party itself becomes a despotism, or, if government itself becomes nothing but organized party, then the danger apprehended by Washington is upon us.

APPENDIX IV.

With the increase of population and wealth and power; with the spoils of office dependent upon the elections; with vast interests affected by legislation, as in the care and disposition of public property, the raising of public revenue, the grant or regulation of corporate powers and monopolistic combinations, the danger is that corruption, always insidious, always aggressive and always dangerous to popular government, will control party machinery to effect its ends, tempt public men into accepting favors at its hands by taking office purchased by its influence, and flourish in rank luxuriance under the shelter of a system which confounds the honest and the patriotic with the cunning and the profligate. An intelligent public opinion ceases to exist when it cannot assert itself, and great measures and great principles are lost when elections degenerate into the mere registration of the decrees of selfishness and greed.

Whenever party spirit becomes so intense as to compass such results it will have reached the height denounced by Washington, and will realize in the action it dictates the terrible definition of despotic government, "When the savages wish to eat fruit they cut down a tree and pluck the fruit."

However difficult it may be to fully appreciate the influence of great men upon the cause of civilization, it is impossible to overestimate that of Washington, thus exerted through precept, as well as by example. In the general recognition of to-day of the effect of that which he did, that which he said, that which he was, upon the public conscience, is found the justification of the confident claim that popular government under the form prescribed by the fundamental law has ceased to be an experiment. Neither foreign wars, nor attacks upon either of the coördinate departments, nor the irritation of a disputed national election, nor territorial aggrandizement, nor the addition of realm after realm to the empire of States, nor sectional controversies, nor the destruction of a great economical, social and political institution, nor the shock of arms in internecine conflict, have impaired the structure of the government or subverted the orderly rule of the people.

But the deliverance vouchsafed in time of tribulation is as earnestly to be sought in time of prosperity, when material acquisition may deaden the spiritual sense and impede the progress of human elevation.

In the growth of population; in the expansion of commerce, manufactures and the useful arts; in progress in scientific discovery and invention; in the accumulation of wealth, in material advancement of every kind, the century has indeed been marvelous. Steam, electricity, gas, telegraphy, photography, have multiplied the instrumentalities for the exercise of human power. Science, philosophy, literature and art have moved forward along the lines of prior achievement. But wants have multiplied as civilization has advanced, and with multiplied wants and the increased freedom of the individual have come the antagonisms inevitably incident to inequality of condition, even though there is widely extended improvement upon the whole, and often because of it, and added to them the more serious discontents arising from the existence, notwithstanding the immense results of stimulated production, of privation and distress.

The Declaration asserted political equality and the possession of the inalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and the future of the individual was assumed to be secured in securing through government that equality and those rights.

In spite of the violent overthrow of institutions in the French Revolution, that great convulsion carried within it the same salutary principles, while a quickening outburst of spiritual energy marked the commencement of the industrial development of England, and all Europe glowed with the fires of sympathy with the wretched and oppressed.

Throughout the hundred years thus introduced, aspiration for the elevation of humanity has not diminished in intensity, and hope of the general attainment of a more exalted plane has gained new strength in the effort to remove or mitigate the ills which have oppressed mankind. The enhanced valuation of human life, the abolition of slavery, the increase of benevolent and charitable institutions, the large public appropriations and private benefactions to the cause of education, the wide diffusion of intelligence, perceptible growth in religion, morality and fraternal kindness, encourage the effort and give solid ground for the hope. And since the protection and regulation of the rights of individuals, as between themselves and as between them and the community, ultimately come to express the will of the latter, it is not unreasonable to contend that the perfectibility of man is bound up in the preservation of republican institutions.

Where the pressure upon the masses has been intense, the drift has been toward increased interference by the state in the attempt to alleviate inequality of condition. So long as that interference is enabling and protective only to enable, and individual effort is not so circumscribed as to destroy the self-reliance of the people, they move onward with accelerated speed in intellectual and moral as well as material progress; but where man allows his beliefs, his family, his property, his labor, each of his acts, to be subjected to the omnipotence of the state, or is unmindful of the fact that it is the duty of the people to support the government and not of the government to support the people, such a surrender of independence involves the cessation of such progress in its largest sense.

The statement that popular outbreaks were often as beneficial in the political world as storms in the physical was defended upon the ground that, although evils, they were productive of good by preventing the degeneracy of government and nourishing that general attention to public affairs, the absence of which would be tantamount to the abdication of self-government.

But while the rights to life, to use one's faculties in all lawful ways, and to acquire and enjoy property, are morally fundamental rights antecedent to constitutions, which do not create, but secure and protect them, yet it is within the power of the state to promote the health, peace, morals, education and good order of the people by legislation to that end, and to regulate the use of property in which the public has such an interest as to be entitled to assert control. In this wide field of regulation by law, and in the reformation of laws which are found to promote inequality, as well as in the patient efforts of mutual forbearance which the education of conflict produces, the direction of the rule of the people is steadily towards an amelioration not to be found in the dead level of despotism, nor in the destruction of society proposed by the anarchist.

It is but little more than thirty years since the well-known prophecy was uttered, that with the increase of population and the taking up of the public lands, our institutions then being really put to the test, either some Cæsar or Napoleon would seize the reins of government, or our republic would be plundered and laid waste as the Roman Empire had been, but by Huns and Vandals engendered within our own country and by our own institutions.

The brilliant essayist did not comprehend the character of our fundamental law, the securities carefully devised to prevent facility in changing it, and the provisions which inhibit the subversion of individual freedom, the impairment of the obligation of contracts and the confiscation of property, nor realize the practical operation of a governmental scheme intended to secure that sober second thought which alone constitutes public opinion in this country, and which makes of government by the people a government strong enough, in the language of the address, to "withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property," without which "liberty is little else than a name."

Undoubtedly to this people, who from four have become seventy millions in the passage of their first century, to reach by the close of the second, perhaps, seven hundred millions, with resources which can feed and clothe and render happy more than twice that number, the solution of grave problems is committed.

How shall the evils of municipal government, the poverty, the vice, engendered by the disproportionate growth of urban populations, be dealt with as that growth continues? How shall immigration be regulated so that precious institutions may not be threatened by too large an influx of those lacking in assimilative power and inclination? How shall the full measure of duty towards that other race, to which in God's providence this country has been so long a home, be discharged so that participation in common blessings and in the exercise of common rights may lead to and rest upon equal education and intelligence? How shall monopoly be checked, and the pressure of accumulation yield to that equitable distribution, which shall "undo excess, and each man have enough?" How shall the individual be held to the recognition of his responsibility for government, and to meet the demand of public obligations? How shall corruption in private and public life be eradicated?

These and like questions must be answered, and they will be by the nation of Washington, which in the exercise of the sagacity and prudence and self-control born of free institutions, and the cultivation of the humanities of Christian civilization, will hallow the name American, by making it the synonym of the highest sense of duty, the highest morality, the highest patriotism, and so become more powerful and more noble than the powerful and noble Roman nation, which stood for centuries the embodiment of law and order and government, but fell when the gods of the fireside fled from hearthstones whose sanctity had been invaded, and its citizens lost the sense of duty in indulgence in pleasure.

And so the new century may be entered upon in the spirit of optimism, the natural result, perhaps, of a self-confidence which has lost nothing in substance by experience, though it has gained in the moderation of its impetuosity; yet an optimism essential to the accomplishment of great ends, not blind to perils, but bold in the fearlessness of a faith whose very consciousness of the limitations of the present asserts the attainability of the untravelled world of a still grander future.

No ship can sail forever over summer seas. The storms that it has weathered test and demonstrate its ability to survive the storms to come, but storms there must be until there shall be no more sea.

But as amid the tempests in which our ship of state was launched, and in the times succeeding, so in the times to come, with every exigency constellations of illustrious men will rise upon the angry skies, to control the whirlwind and dispel the clouds by their potent influences, while from the "clear upper sky" the steady light of the great planet marks out the course the vessel must pursue, and sits shining on the sails as it comes grandly into the haven where it would be.

APPENDIX V.

In Memoriam.

ORLOW W. CHAPMAN,

DIED JANUARY 19, 1890.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

OCTOBER TERM, 1889.

MONDAY, January 20, 1890.

MR. ATTORNEY-GENERAL addressed the court as follows:

MAY IT PLEASE THE COURT: A decree of nature, as distressing as it was unexpected, makes it my duty to announce to the court the death of the Solicitor-General of the United States. In the Sabbath quiet of yesterday morning, after an illness, painful, but until near the end not believed to be fatal, Orlow W. Chapman rested forever from earthly duty and earthly suffering.

The shock and the grief of this event are today, I am sure, too fresh and strong upon all of us to admit of fitting words of eulogy upon the character of this eminent lawyer and good man. Let that grateful duty await some future occasion.

My mission (this morning is only to make this sad announcement, and to ask the court to take such action as may be due to the memory of our loved associate and now departed brother.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE responded as follows:

The court receives the melancholy intelligence of the death of the Solicitor-General with profound regret.

There is a case now under argument and near its conclusion in which the counsel engaged are from a distant State. We feel compelled, therefore, to continue our session until the argument of that case is closed, but will then adjourn as a deserved mark of respect to the memory of the lamented deceased, and also in order to enable the members of the court to attend his funeral in a body.

APPENDIX VI.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION
FEDERAL JUDICIARY,

HELD AT NEW YORK,
FEBRUARY 4, 1890.

Under the auspices and pursuant to arrangement of the Bar Association of the State of New York, assisted by the Bar Association of the City of New York and the American Bar Association, the hundredth anniversary of the first session of the Supreme Court of the United States was celebrated on the fourth day of February, 1890, first, by commemorative literary exercises in the morning at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York City; and, second, by a banquet at the Lenox Lyceum in the evening of the same day. From the large committees of the several Bar Associations, sub-committees were appointed to carry out details as follows:

- Executive Committee.
- Committee on Finance.
- Committee on Invitations.
- Committee on Commemorative Exercises.
- Sub-Committee on Transportation.
- Committee on Entertainments and Receptions.
- Sub-Committee on Reception and Entertainment of Invited Guests.
- Sub-Committee on Toasts.
- Sub-Committee on Banquet.

I. Commemorative literary exercises at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Among other things said and done, and as most eminently appropriate to be reproduced here, may be considered the following

REMARKS OF MR. CHIEF JUSTICE FULLER.

Mr. Chairman:

I rise to express to the New York State Bar Association and to those who have co-operated with it, on behalf of the Supreme Court of the United States, the appreciation of its members of the admirable manner in which the centennial anniversary of the organization of the Judicial Department of the general government is being celebrated, and their sense of the cordial hospitality with which they have been welcomed to the metropolitan city, where the first session of the court was held. Their acknowledgments are due for the terms in which that welcome has been extended during these exercises, and for the discriminating and eloquent addresses in historical and biographical review of the court, and in exposition of its powers, the ends which it secures, and the vital functions which it exercises in the masterly constitutional scheme devised to perpetuate popular government—addresses worthy of the eminent men who have pronounced them, leaders in that great fraternity whence the membership of courts is derived, and upon whose assistance and support all courts rely.

But it is not for me, while tendering these acknowledgments, to enter upon these comprehensive reflections suggested by the occasion, and which should find expression on our part. That grateful duty appropriately devolves upon one of those veteran jurists, the fruitful labors of whose many years have imparted imperishable fame to the tribunal and themselves. Three of them, still shining in use, find work of noble note may yet be done in the cause to which their lives have been dedicated; while another, the recipient of the liveliest attachment on the part of his brethren and of the people he has served so well, maintains, in his well-earned retirement, a never-ceasing interest in the exalted administration of justice.

And I deem it a peculiar felicity that at a celebration conducted under the auspices of the bar of the State of New York—that bar which has given to the Supreme Bench a Jay, a Livingston, a Thompson, a Nelson and a Hunt, and whose Blatchford continues most worthily to adorn it—I am enabled to introduce, as the representative of the court, a member of the same bar, who has reflected so much credit upon its training in more than thirty years of distinguished judicial service, Mr. Justice Field of California.

ADDRESS OF MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Mr. President and Gentlemen:

As the Chief Justice of the United States has been pleased to refer to my former connection with the bar of this State and city, I beg to say that I still claim, with pride, membership there, and trust that the claim will be allowed. Although I remained in this city but a few years, swept away by the current which set, in 1849, for the Eldorado of the West, dreaming that I might perhaps in some way aid in laying the foundations of that great Commonwealth, which everyone saw was to arise on the Pacific, I carried with me, and still retain, pleasant recollections of the learned bar of that period, and of its great lawyers, to whom I looked up with admiration: George Wood, George Griffin, Daniel Lord, Francis B. Cutting, Benjamin F. Butler, John Duer, Charles O'Connor, James W. Gerard, James T. Brady and others—names never spoken of throughout our land without profound respect. In my subsequent life, in the varied experiences with which it has been marked, and with the extended acquaintance I have had with the legal profession, I have always regarded them as among the ablest and most learned of great advocates.

The Chief Justice, in behalf of himself and his associates, has expressed in fitting terms their high appreciation of the courtesy extended to them by the Association of the Bar of the State of New York, the remembrance of which they will carry through life. He has also expressed the pleasure which they have felt, in common with all here present, in listening to the addresses made upon the organization of the Supreme Court, and its place in the constitutional system of the United States, and upon the lives and careers of the justices who, by their expositions of the Constitution and their maintenance of its principles, have shed lustre upon that tribunal. But far beyond these eloquent discourses, and beyond the power of expression in words, is the eulogium presented by this vast assembly,—composed of great lawyers, eminent judges, and men distinguished in different departments of life for their honorable public services,—gathered from all parts of our country, to celebrate the centennial anniversary of the court's organization, and to listen to the story of its labors during the hundred years of its existence—an assembly presided over by one who has held the high office of President of the United States.

In every age and with every people there have been celebrations for triumphs in war—for battles won on land and on sea—and for triumphs of peace, such as the opening of new avenues of commerce, the discovery of new fields of industry and prosperity, the construction of stately temples and monuments, or grand edifices for the arts and sciences, and for the still nobler institutions of charity.

But never until now has there been in any country a celebration like this, to commemorate the establishment of a judicial tribunal as a coördinate and permanent branch of its government. The unobtrusive labors of such a department, the simplicity of its proceedings, unaccompanied by pomp or retinue, and the small number of persons composing it, have caused it to escape rather than to attract popular attention and applause.

This celebration had its inspiration in a profound reverence for the Constitution of the United States as the sure and only means of preserving the Union, with its inestimable blessings, and the conviction that this tribunal has materially contributed to its just appreciation and to a ready obedience to its authority.

For that Constitution the deepest reverence may well be entertained. Its adoption was essential to that dual government by which alone free institutions can be maintained in a country so widely extended as ours, embracing every variety of climate; furnishing different products, supporting different industries, and having in different sections people of different habits and pursuits, and in many cases of different religious faiths.

Of this complex government—of its origin and operation—I may be pardoned if I say a few words, before speaking of its Judicial Department and of the peculiar functions which distinguish it from the judicial departments of all other countries, and before speaking of the necessity of legislation, that its tribunal of last resort may be as useful in the future as we believe it has been in the past.

Experience has shown that in a country of great territorial extent and varied interests, peace and lasting prosperity can exist with a civilized people only when local affairs are controlled by local authority, and, at the same time, there are lodged in the general government of the country such sovereign powers as will enable it to regulate the intercourse of its people with foreign nations and between the several communities, protect them in all their rights in such intercourse, defend the country against invasion and domestic violence, and maintain the supremacy of the laws throughout its whole domain. This principle the framers of the Constitution acted upon in establishing the government of the Union, by leaving unimpaired the power of the States to control all matters of local interest, and creating a new government of sovereign powers for matters of general and national concern. They thus succeeded in reconciling local self-government—or home-rule, as it is termed—with the exercise of national sovereignty for national purposes. Under this dual government each State may pursue the policy best suited to its people and resources, though unlike that of another State. And yet there can be no violent conflicts so long as the central government exercises its rightful power, and secures them against foreign invasion and internal violence, and extends to the citizens of each State protection in the others. The adaptation of this form of government for a far more extended territory than that existing at its adoption, has been demonstrated by the addition to the Union of new States with interests and resources in many respects essentially different from those of the original States, but which, from experience of its benefits and their instinctive yearning for nationality, have formed a like attachment to the Constitution.

The prosperity which has followed this distribution of governmental powers not only attests the wisdom of the framers of the Constitution, but transcends even their highest expectations. In the history of no people—ancient or modern—has anything been known at all comparable with the progress of this country since that time in the development of its resources, in the addition to its material wealth, in its application of science to works of public utility, in the increase of its population and in the general contentment and happiness of its people. The predictions of the most enthusiastic as to its growth and prosperity never equalled the stupendous reality.

The Constitution of the United States, which, in ordaining this complex government, has been productive of such vast results, was the outgrowth of institutions and doctrines inherited from our ancestors and applied under the new conditions of our country. A distinguished English statesman has designated it as the most wonderful product struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man; but this designation is only true as to the character of the instrument. Though it received definite form from the labors of the convention of 1787, it was, in its division of governmental powers into three departments, and in its guaranties of private rights, the product of centuries of experience in the government of England. It had its roots deep in the past, as all enduring institutions have. The colonists brought with them the great principles of civil liberty, which had been established there after many a conflict with the Crown, and which were proclaimed in Magna Charta and in the Declaration of Rights. Our country was in this respect the heir of all the ages. Not a blow was struck for liberty in the Old World that did not wake an echo in the forests of the New. Every vantage ground gained there on its behalf was courageously and stubbornly held here. Thus liberty, with all its priceless blessings, passed from country to country, from hemisphere to hemisphere, and from generation to generation. Claiming this inheritance, the Continental Congress, assembled in 1774 to provide measures to resist the encroachments of the British Crown, declared that the inhabitants of the Colonies were entitled, "by the immutable laws of nature, the principles of the English Constitution and their several charters, to all the rights, privileges and immunities of free and natural-born subjects within the realm of England." And when a subsequent Congress, in 1776, declared the independence of the Colonies, it proclaimed that the rights of man to life, to liberty and to the pursuit of happiness—having then risen to a just appreciation of their true source—were held by him, not as a boon from king or parliament, or as the grant of any charter, but as the endowment of his Creator; also, that to secure these rights—not to grant them—governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. The different communities, which, by the separation from the mother country, had ceased to be colonies and had become States, when framing new constitutions to conform to their new conditions, inserted guaranties for the protection of these rights, with other provisions required for the government of free commonwealths.

It was foreseen, however, by members of the Continental Congress and by thoughtful patriots throughout the country, that when the independence of the Colonies was recognized by the mother country, as sooner or later it must be, they would be at once surrounded by difficulties and dangers, threatening their peace and even their existence as independent communities. It was plain to them that, without some common protecting power, disputes from conflicting interests and rivalries, incident to all neighboring states, would arise between them, which would inevitably lead to armed conflicts and invite the interference of foreign powers, ending in their conquest and subjection; and that all that was gained by the experience of centuries and by the Revolution on behalf of the rights of man and free government would be lost.

To provide against these apprehended dangers, a federation or league between the States was proposed as a measure of common defense and protection. Articles of Confederation were accordingly framed and submitted to the Legislatures of the States, and finally adopted in 1781.

But, as we all know, these articles provided no mode of carrying into effect the measures of the Confederation, or even the treaties made by it. They established no tribunal to construe its enactments and enforce their provisions. Its power was simply that of recommendation to the States, its framers appearing to have believed that the States had only to know what was necessary, in the judgment of Congress, for the general welfare, to provide adequate means for its accomplishment. A government which could only enforce its enactments upon the approval of thirteen distinct sovereignties necessarily contained within itself the seeds of its dissolution; it could not give the general protection needed. Having no power to exact obedience or to punish for disobedience to its advisory ordinances, its recommendations were disregarded not only by States but by individuals.

But though the government of the Confederation failed to accomplish the purpose of its creation, its experience was of inestimable value; it made clear to the whole country what was essential in a general government in order to give the needed security and protection, and thus prepared the way for the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. So out of the necessities of the times, to preserve whatever of freedom had been gained in the past,—gained after years of bitter experience, both in the mother country and in our own,—and to secure its full fruition in the future, that instrument was framed and adopted. By it the great defects of the Confederation were avoided, and a government created with ample powers to give to the States and to all their inhabitants the needed security—a government taking exclusive charge of our foreign relations, representing the people of all the States in that respect as one nation, with power to declare war, make peace, negotiate treaties and form alliances, and at the same time securing a republican government to each State and freedom of intercourse between the States, equality of privileges and immunities to citizens of each State in the several States, uniformity of commercial regulations, a common currency, a standard of weights and measures, one postal system, and such other matters as concerned all the States and their people.

By the union of the States, which had its origin in the necessities of the war of the Revolution, which was declared in the Articles of Confederation to be perpetual, but which was rendered perfect only under the Constitution, the political body known as the United States was created and took its place in the family of nations. With that union the States became, in their relations to foreign countries and their citizens or subjects, one nation, and their people became one people, with a government designed to be perpetual. A dissolution of the Union would, indeed, remit the States to their original position of separate communities, and the United States ceasing to be a political body would pass from the family of nations. But such a possibility was never considered by the framers of the Constitution; no provisions are found within it contemplating such a result. As aptly stated by Chief Justice Chase, "the Constitution in all its provisions looks to an indestructible Union composed of indestructible States." Its government was clothed with the means to give effect to all its measures, which none have been able during the century of its existence successfully to resist. In the late civil war its strength was subjected to the severest test. But notwithstanding the immense forces wielded by the Confederate States, the extent of territory they controlled, and the vast numbers which recognized their authority, the government of the Union never for one hour renounced its claim to supreme authority over the whole country, and to the allegiance of every citizen thereof. And when the contest ended—a contest which was the most tremendous and awful civil war known in history, though made resplendent with unprecedented acts of heroic courage on both sides—the armies of the Confederate States were scattered, and their whole government overthrown. Whilst the fiery courage and the martial spirit of their people extorted our admiration,—we are all of the same warrior race,—their attempts to break the Union only disclosed the immovable solidity of its foundations and the massive strength of its superstructure. It was the dash of the tempestuous waves against the eternal rock. And now, in all its wide domain, in respect to every right secured by the Constitution, no citizen of the Republic is beyond its power or so humble as to be beneath its protection. We can now confidently look forward to the time when the country will embrace hundreds of millions of people, and are justified in believing that the States will be united then, as now, by kindred sentiments, and common pride in the greatness and the glory of the country. We have an abiding faith that when we shall have surpassed—as we are destined to do—in the vastness of our empire, as in the civilization and wealth of our people, ancient Rome in her greatest days, we shall continue to be, for all national purposes, as now, one nation, one people, one power.

The crowning defect in the government under the Articles of Confederation was the absence of any judicial power; it had no tribunal to expound and enforce its laws.

In no one particular was the difference between that government and the one which superseded it more marked than in its Judicial Department. The Constitution declares not only in what courts the judicial power of the United States shall be vested, but to what subjects it shall extend. It is vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish, and it extends not only to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States; and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens or subjects; but also to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States and treaties made under their authority. Cases are considered as arising under the Constitution, laws and treaties of the United States, whenever any question respecting that Constitution and those laws or treaties is presented in such form that the judicial power can act upon it—that is to say, when a right or claim is asserted for the maintenance of which a construction of that Constitution, or of a law or a treaty of the United States, is required.

No government is suited to a free people where a judicial department does not exist with power to decide all judicial questions arising upon its constitution and laws.

The Judicial Department established under the Constitution is thus co-extensive; it reaches to every judicial question which arises under the Constitution, treaties and laws of the United States. It has devolved upon it, when such a question arises, beyond the ordinary functions of a judicial department under a single, as distinguished from a dual, government, the duty of determining whether the delegation of powers to Congress on the one hand, or the reservation of powers to the States on the other, is passed by either, and thus of preventing jarring conflicts. And in two particulars it is distinguished from the judicial department of any other country; one, in that it can summon before it the States of the Union, and adjust controversies between them, going even to the extent of determining disputes as to their boundaries, rights of soil and jurisdiction; the other, in that it can determine the validity or invalidity of an Act of Congress or of the States, when the validity of either is assailed in litigation before it.

Controversies between different states of the world respecting their boundaries, rights of soil and jurisdiction have been the fruitful source of irritation between their people, and not unfrequently of bloody conflicts. The history of many of the principalities of Germany in the fifteenth century is a history of desolating wars over disputed boundaries. The license, disorders and crimes usually attendant upon border warfare were the cause of widespread misery, until the establishment under Maximilian of an imperial chamber for the settlement of such controversies, which brought out of chaos order and tranquillity in the German Empire.

Between the States in this country, under the Articles of Confederation, there were also numerous conflicts as to boundaries and consequent rights of soil and jurisdiction. They existed between Pennsylvania and Virginia; between Massachusetts and New Hampshire, and between Virginia and New Jersey. By the judicial article of the Constitution all such controversies are withdrawn from the arbitra-

ment of war to the arbitrament of law. Thus, for the first time in the history of the world is the spectacle presented of a provision embodied in the fundamental law of a country, that controversies between States—still clothed for purposes of internal government with the powers of independent communities—shall be submitted to the peaceful and orderly modes of judicial procedure for settlement—controversies which Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, in the case of Penn v. Lord Baltimore, said were worthy the judicature of a Roman Senate rather than of a single judge.

The practical application of the power of the Supreme Court in this particular has been fruitful of happy results. In 1837 it settled a disputed boundary between Rhode Island and Massachusetts; in 1849 it brought to an adjustment the disputed line between Missouri and Iowa; and, in 1870, it settled the controversy between Virginia and West Virginia as to jurisdiction over two counties within the asserted boundaries of the latter. Certainly no provision of the Constitution can be mentioned, more honorable to the country or more expressive of its Christian civilization, than the one which provides that controversies of this character shall be thus peacefully settled. In determining them, the court is surrounded by no imperial guard, by no bands of janissaries; it has with it only the moral judgment and the invisible power of the people. Should the necessity arise that invisible power would soon develop into a visible and irresistible force.

The power of the court to pass upon the conformity with the Constitution of an Act of Congress, or of a State, and thus to declare its validity or invalidity, or limit its application, follows from the nature of the Constitution itself, as the supreme law of the land,—the separation of the three departments of government into legislative, executive and judicial—the order of the Constitution—each independent in its sphere, and the specific restraints upon the exercise of legislative powers contained in that instrument. In all other countries, except perhaps Canada under the government of the Dominion, the judgment of the legislature as to the compatibility of a law passed by it with the constitution of the country has been considered as superior to the judgment of the courts. But under the Constitution of the United States, the Supreme Court is independent of other departments in all judicial matters, and the compatibility between the Constitution and a statute, whether of Congress or of a State, is a judicial and not a political question, and therefore is to be determined by the court whenever a litigant asserts a right or claim under the disputed Act for judicial decision.

This power of that court is sometimes characterized by foreign writers and jurists as a unique provision of a disturbing and dangerous character, tending to defeat the popular will as expressed by the legislature. In thus characterizing it they look at the power as one that may be exercised by way of supervision over the general legislation of Congress, determining the validity of an enactment in advance of its being contested. But a declaration of the unconstitutionality of an Act of Congress or of the States cannot be made in that way by the Judicial Department. The unconstitutionality of an Act cannot be pronounced except as required for the determination of contested litigation. No such authority as supposed would be tolerated in this country. It would make the Supreme Court a third house of Congress, and its conclusions would be subject to all the infirmities of general legislation.

The limitations upon legislative power, arising from the nature of the Constitution and its specific restraints in favor of private rights, cannot be disregarded without conceding that the legislature can change at will the form of our government from one of limited to one of unlimited powers. Whenever, therefore, any court, called upon to construe an enactment of Congress or of a State, the validity of which is assailed, finds its provisions inconsistent with the Constitution, it must give effect to the latter, because it is the fundamental law of the whole people, and, as such, superior to any law of Congress or any law of a State. Otherwise the limitations upon legislative power expressed in the Constitution or implied by it must be considered as vain attempts to control a power which is in its nature uncontrollable.

This unique power, as it is termed, is therefore not only not a disturbing or dangerous force, but is a necessary consequence of our form of government. Its exercise is necessary to keep the administration of the government, both of the United States and of the States, in all their branches, within the limits assigned to them by the Constitution of the United States, and thus secure justice to the people against the unrestrained legislative will of either—the reign of law against the sway of arbitrary power.

As to the decisions of the Supreme Court respecting the constitutionality of Acts of Congress or of the States, they have, as a general rule, been recognized as furthering the great purposes of the Constitution,—as where, in Gibbons v. Ogden, the court declared the freedom of the navigable waters of New York to all vessels, against a claim of an exclusive right to navigate them by steam vessels under a grant of the State to particular individuals;—or where, as in Dartmouth College v. Woodward, the court enforced the prohibition of the Constitution against the impairment by the Legislature of a State of the obligation of a contract, declaring void an Act of New Hampshire which altered the character of the college in essential particulars, and holding that the charter granted to the trustees of the college was a contract within the meaning of the Constitution and protected by it, and that the college was a private charitable institution—not under the control of the Legislature;—or where, as in Brown v. Maryland, the court declared that commerce with foreign nations could not, under a law of the State, be burdened with a tax upon goods imported, before they were broken in bulk, though the tax was imposed in the form of a license to sell;—or where, as in Weston v. Charleston, the court declared that the bonds and securities of the United States could not be subjected to taxation by the States, and thus the credit of the United States be impaired;—or where, as in McCulloch v. Maryland, and Osborn v. Bank of the United States, the court denied the authority of the States, by taxation or otherwise, to impede, burden, or in any manner control the means or measures adopted by the government for the execution of its powers;—or where, as in Hall v. DeCuir, The Wabash Railway Co. v. Illinois, The Philadelphia and Southern Steamship Co. v. Pennsylvania, and other cases determined in the last quarter of a century, the court has removed barriers to interstate and foreign commerce interposed by state legislation.

And so, in the great majority of cases in which the validity of an Act of Congress or of a State has been called in question, its decisions have been in the same direction, to uphold and carry out the provisions of the Constitution. In some instances the court, in the exercise of its powers in this respect, may have made mistakes. The judges would be more than human if this were not so. They have never claimed infallibility; they have often differed among themselves. All they have ever asserted is, that they have striven to the utmost of their abilities to be right, and to perform the functions with which they are clothed to the advancement of justice and the good of the country.

In respect to their liability to err in their conclusions this may be said—that in addition to the desire which must be ascribed to them to be just—the conditions under which they perform their duties, the publicity of their proceedings, the discussions before them, and the public attention which is drawn to all decisions of general interest, tend to prevent any grave departure from the purposes of the Constitution. And, further, there is this corrective of error in every such departure; it will not fit harmoniously with other rulings; it will collide with them, and thus compel explanations and qualifications until the error is eliminated. Like all other error it is bound to die; truth alone is immortal, and in the end will assert its rightful supremacy.

And now, with its history in the century past, what is needed, that the Supreme Court of the United States should sustain its character and be as useful in the century to come? I answer, as a matter of the first consideration, that it should not be overborne with work, and by that I mean it should have some relief from the immense burden now cast upon it. This can only be done by legislative action, and in determining what measures shall be adopted for that purpose Congress will undoubtedly receive with favor suggestions from the bar associations of the country. The justices already do all in their power, for each one examines every case and passes his individual judgment upon it. No case in the Supreme Court is ever referred to any one justice, or to several of the justices, to decide and report to the others. Every suitor, however humble, is entitled to and receives the judgment of every justice upon his case.

In considering this matter it must be borne in mind that, in addition to the great increase in the number of admiralty and maritime cases, from the enlarged commerce on the seas, and on the navigable waters of the United States, and in the number of patent cases, from the multitude of inventions brought forth by the genius of our people, calling for judicial determination, even to the extent of occupying a large portion of the time of the court, many causes, which did not exist upon its organization or during the first quarter of the century, have added enormously to its business. Thus by the new agencies of steam and electricity in the movement of machinery and transmission of intelligence, creating railways and steamboats, telegraphs and telephones, and adding almost without number to establishments for the manufacture of fabrics, transactions are carried on to an infinitely greater extent than before between different States, leading to innumerable controversies between their citizens, which have found their way to that tribunal for decision. More than one half of the business before it for years has arisen from such controversies.

The facility with which corporations can now be formed has also increased its business far beyond what it was in the early part of the century. Nearly all enterprises requiring for their successful prosecution large investments of capital are conducted by corporations. They, in fact, embrace every branch of industry, and the wealth that they hold in the United States equals in value four fifths of the entire property of the country. They carry on business with the citizens of every State as well as with foreign nations, and the litigation arising out of their transactions is enormous, giving rise to every possible question to which the jurisdiction of the federal courts extends.

The numerous grants of the public domain, embracing hundreds of millions of acres, in aid of the construction of railways; also for common schools, for public buildings and institutions of learning, have produced a great variety of questions of much intricacy and difficulty. The discovery of mines of the precious metals, in our new possessions on the Pacific Coast, and the modes adopted for their development, have added many more. The legislation required by the exigencies of the civil war, and following it, and the Constitutional Amendments which were designed to give further security to personal rights, have brought before the court questions of the greatest interest and importance, calling for the most earnest and laborious consideration. Indeed, the cases which have come before this court, springing from causes which did not exist during the first quarter of the century, exceed, in the magnitude of the property interests involved, and in the importance of the public questions presented, all cases brought within the same period before any court of Christendom.

Whilst the Constitutional Amendments have not changed the structure of our dual form of government, but are additions to the previous Amendments, and are to be considered in connection with them and the original Constitution as one instrument, they have removed from existence an institution which was felt by wise statesmen to be inconsistent with the great declarations of right upon which our government is founded; and they have vastly enlarged the subjects of federal jurisdiction. The Amendment declaring that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, shall exist in the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction, not only has done away with the slavery of the black man, as it then existed, but interdicts forever the slavery of any man, and not only slavery, but involuntary servitude—that is, surfrage, vassalage, villeinage, peonage, and all other forms of compulsory service for the mere benefit or pleasure of others. As has often been said, it was intended to make everyone born in this country a free man and to give him a right to pursue the ordinary vocations of life without other restraint than such as affects all others, and to enjoy equally with them the fruits of his labor. The right to labor as he may think proper without injury to others is an element of that freedom which is his birthright.

The Amendment declaring that no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, or deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, or deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, has proclaimed that equality before the law shall forever be the governing rule of all the States of the Union, which every person however humble may invoke for his protection. In enforcing these provisions, or considering the laws adopted for their enforcement, or laws which are supposed to be in conflict with them, difficult and far-reaching questions are presented at every term for decision.

Up to the middle of the present century the calendar of the court did not average one hundred and forty cases a term, and never amounted at any one term to three hundred cases; the calendar of the present term exceeds fifteen hundred. In view of the condition of the court—its crowded docket—the multitude of questions constantly brought before it of the greatest and most extended influence—surely it has a right to call upon the country to give it assurance and relief. Something must be done in that direction and should be done speedily to prevent the delays to suitors now existing. To delay justice is as pernicious as to deny it. One of the most precious articles of Magna Charta was that in which the King declared that he would not deny nor delay to any man justice or right. And assuredly what the barons of England wrung from their monarch, the people of the United States will not refuse to any suitor for justice in their tribunals.

Furthermore, I hardly need say that, to retain the respect and confidence conceded in the past, the court, whilst cautiously abstaining from assuming powers granted by the Constitution to other departments of the government, must unhesitatingly and to the best of its ability enforce, as heretofore, not only all the limitations of the Constitution upon the federal and state governments, but also all the guaranties it contains of the private rights of the citizen, both of person and of property. As population and wealth increase; as the inequalities in the conditions of men become more and more marked and disturbing; as the enormous aggregation of wealth possessed by some corporations excites uneasiness lest their power should become dominating in the legislation of the country, and thus encroach upon the rights or crush out the business of individuals of small means; as population in some quarters presses upon the means of subsistence, and angry menaces against order find vent in loud denunciations,—it becomes more and more the imperative duty of the court to enforce with a firm hand all the guaranties of the Constitution. Every decision weakening their restraining power is a blow to the peace of society and to its progress and improvement. It should never be forgotten that protection to property and to persons cannot be separated. Where property is insecure, the rights of persons are unsafe. Protection to the one goes with protection to the other; and there can be neither prosperity nor progress where either is uncertain.

That the Justices of the Supreme Court must possess the ability and learning required by the duties of their office, and a character for purity and integrity beyond reproach, need not be said. But it is not sufficient for the performance of his judicial duty that a judge should act honestly in all that he does. He must be ready to act in all cases presented for his judicial determination with absolute fearlessness. Timidity, hesitation and cowardice in any public officer excite and deserve only contempt, but infinitely more in a judge than in any other, because he is appointed to discharge a public trust of the most sacred character. To decide against his conviction of the law or judgment as to the evidence, whether moved by prejudice, or passion, or the clamor of the crowd, is to assent to a robbery as infamous in morals and as deserving of punishment as that of the highwayman or the burglar; and to hesitate or refuse to act when duty calls is hardly less the subject of just reproach. If he is influenced by apprehensions that his character will be attacked, or his motives impugned, or that his judgment will be attributed to the influence of particular classes, cliques or associations, rather than to his own convictions of the law, he will fall lamentably in his high office.

To the intelligent and learned bar of the country the judges must look for their most effective and substantial support. Its members appreciate more than any other class the difficulties and labors and responsibilities of the judicial office; and whilst the most severe and unsparing of critics, they are in the end the most just in their judgments. If they entertain for the judges respect and confidence, if they accord to them learning, integrity and courage, the general public will not be slow in accepting their appreciation as the true estimate of the judges' character. Sustained by this professional and public confidence, the Supreme Court may hope to still further strengthen the hearts of all in love, admiration and reverence for the Constitution of the United States—the noblest inheritance ever possessed by a free people.

II. At the banquet at the Lenox Lyceum was delivered the following

IN RESPONSE TO THE TOAST, "THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES."

Mr. President:

The toast you have read suggests many reflections of interest. But when an attempt is made to give shape to them, in my own mind, the fact confronts me that every line of thought most appropriate to this occasion has been covered by addresses delivered, in another place, by distinguished members of the bar, and by an eminent jurist responding on behalf of the Supreme Court of the United States. They have left nothing to be added respecting the organization, the history, the personnel or the jurisdiction of that tribunal. It is well that those addresses are to be preserved in permanent form for the delight and instruction of all that are to come after us; especially those who, as judges and lawyers, will be connected with the administration of justice. I name the lawyers with the bench, because upon them, equally with the judges, rests the responsibility for an intelligent determination of causes in the courts, whether relating to public or to private rights. As the bench is recruited from the bar, it must always be that as are the lawyers in any given period, so, in the main, are the courts before which they appear. Upon the integrity, learning and courage of the bar largely depends the welfare of the country of which they are citizens; for, of all members of society, the lawyers are best qualified by education and training to devise the methods necessary to protect the rights of the people against the aggressions of power. But they are also, in the best sense, ministers of justice. It is not true, as a famous lawyer once said, that an advocate, in the discharge of his duty, must know only his client. He owes a duty to the court of which he is an officer, and to the community of which he is a member. Above all, he owes a duty to his own conscience. He misconceives his high calling if he fails to recognize the fact that fidelity to the court is not inconsistent with truth and honor, or with a fearless discharge of duty to his client. It need scarcely be said in this presence that the American Bar have met all the demands that the most scrupulous integrity has exacted from gentlemen in their position.

In the addresses to-day much was said of the Supreme Court of the United States that was gratifying as well to those now members of that tribunal as to all who take pride in its history. But, Mr. President, whatever of honor has come to that court for the manner in which it has discharged the momentous trust committed to it by the Constitution must be shared by the bar of America. "Justice, sir," (I use the words of Daniel Webster), "is the great interest of man on earth. It is the ligament which holds civilized beings and civilized nations together. Wherever her temple stands, and so long as it is duly honored, there is a foundation for social security, general happiness, and the improvement and progress of our race. And whoever labors on this edifice with usefulness and distinction, whoever clears its foundations, strengthens its pillars, adorns its entablatures, or contributes to raise its august dome still higher in the skies, connects himself, in name and fame and character, with that which is and must be as durable as the frame of human society." The Temple of Justice which has been reared in this fair land is largely the work of our lawyers. If there be security for life, liberty and property, it is because the lawyers of America have not been unmindful of their obligations as ministers of justice. Search the history of every State in the Union, and it will be found that they have been foremost in all movements having for their object the maintenance of the law against violence and anarchy; the preservation of the just rights both of the government and of the people.

I read recently a brief speech by Mr. Gladstone, at a banquet given many years ago in honor of the great French advocate, Berryer. He had visited the south of Europe, and witnessed there much cruel oppression of the people. The executive power, he said, not only had broken the law, but had established in its place a system of arbitrary will. He found, to use his own words, that the audacity of tyranny, which had put down chambers and municipalities and extinguished the press, had not been able to do one thing—to silence the bar. He, himself, heard lawyers in courts of justice, undismayed by the presence of soldiers, and in defiance of despotic power, defend the cause of the accused with a fearlessness that could not have been surpassed. He was moved, on that occasion, to say of the English Bar, what may be truly said of the American Bar, that its members are inseparable from our national life, from the security of our national institutions.

It has been said of some of the judgments of the Supreme Court of the United States that they are not excelled by any ever delivered in the judicial tribunals of any country. Candor, however, requires the concession that their preparation was preceded by arguments at its bar of which may be said, what Mr. Justice Buller observed of certain judgments of Lord Mansfield, that they were of such transcendent power that those who heard them were lost in admiration "at the strength and stretch of the human understanding."

Mr. President, I am unwilling to pass from this subject without saying what it is but just to say, that the bar of this imperial State has furnished its quota,—aye more than its quota,—to the army of great lawyers and advocates, who, by their learning, eloquence and labors, have aided the courts of the Union, as well as those of the States, in placing our constitutional system upon foundations which, it is hoped, are to endure for ages. Not to speak of the living, and not to name all the dead who have done honor to the legal profession in this State, I may mention Alexander Hamilton, "formed for all parts, in all alike he shined, variously great," William H. Seward, John C. Spencer, Thomas Addis Emmet, John Wells, George Wood, Joshua A. Spencer, Benjamin F. Butler, Daniel Lord, John Duer, James T. Brady, Ogden Hoffman, Charles O'Connor and Roscoe Conkling. Gentlemen of the bar of New York, you have in these and other great names upon the roll of lawyers and advocates given to the country by your State, an inheritance beyond all price.

But, sir, while the Supreme Court of the United States is indebted to the bar of the country for its invaluable aid in the administration of justice, it is still more indebted to the highest courts of the several States, and to the Circuit and Districts Courts of the Union. Many distinguished members of those courts—judges whose learning and integrity are everywhere recognized—have honored this occasion by their presence. But it is a most felicitous circumstance that we have with us the full bench of the New York Court of Appeals, of whose bar we are guests upon this occasion. Who can adequately estimate, who can overstate the influence for good upon American jurisprudence which has been exerted by the learned judgments delivered by those who have graced the bench of this proud State? Kent, Livingston, Thompson, Spencer, Jones, Nelson, Oakley, Savage, Walworth, Marcy, Bronson, Denio and Selden, not to mention others, will be remembered as long as the science of law has votaries. If what they wrote were obliterated altogether from our judicial history, a void would be left in American jurisprudence that could not be filled. Indeed, the history of American law could not well be written without referring to the judgments and writings of those eminent jurists.

And here it is appropriate to say that the duty of expounding the Constitution of the United States has not devolved alone upon the courts of the Union. From the organization of our government to the present time that duty has been shared by the courts of the States. Congress has taken care to provide that the original jurisdiction of the courts of the Union of suits at law and in equity arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, or under treaties with foreign countries, shall be concurrent with that of the courts of the several States. This feature of our judicial system has had much to do with creating and perpetuating the feeling that the government of the United States is not a foreign government, but a government of the people of all the States, ordained by them to accomplish objects pertaining to the whole country, which could not be efficiently achieved by any government except one deriving its authority from all the people.

As we stand to-night in this commercial metropolis, where the government created by the Constitution was organized, and where the supreme judicial tribunal of the Union held its first session, it is pleasant to remember that all along its pathway that court has had the cordial coöperation and support of the highest court of this, the most powerful of all the States. The Supreme Court of the United States, and the highest court of New York, have not always reached the same conclusions upon questions of general law, nor have they always agreed as to the interpretation of the Constitution of the United States. But, despite these differences, expressed with due regard to the dignity and authority of each tribunal, they have stood together in maintaining these vital principles enunciated by the Supreme Court of the United States:

That while the preservation of the States, with authority to deal with matters not committed to national control, is fundamental in the American constitutional system, the Union cannot exist without a government for the whole;

That the Constitution of the United States was made for the whole people of the Union, and is equally binding upon all the courts and all the citizens;

That the general government, though limited as to its objects, is yet supreme with respect to those objects, is the government of all, its powers are delegated by all, it represents all, and acts for all; and,

That America has chosen to be, in many respects and to many purposes, a nation, and for all these purposes her government is complete, to all these objects it is competent.

Mr. President, a few words more. The members of the Supreme Court of the United States will return to their post of duty with grateful thanks for the opportunity given them to participate in these Centennial exercises. It has been good for us to be here. You have given us, gentlemen, renewed reason to think that the court of which we are members is regarded with affection and confidence by the bar of the country, and that as long as it shall be equal to the tremendous responsibilities imposed upon it, that affection and confidence will not be withdrawn.

We have met here to celebrate the organization of that court, in this city, one hundred years ago—a tribunal fitly declared to be the living voice of the Constitution. Within that period the progress of the nation in all that involves the material prosperity and the moral elevation of the people, has exceeded the most sanguine expectations of those who laid the foundations of our government. But its progress in the knowledge of the principles upon which that government rests, and must continue to rest, if it is to accomplish the beneficent ends for which it was created, is not less marvelous. It was once thought by statesmen whose patriotism is not to be doubted, that the power committed to the courts of the Union, especially to the Supreme Court of the United States, would ultimately destroy the independence, within their respective spheres, of the coördinate departments of the national government, and even endanger the existence and authority of the state governments. But the experience of a century, full of startling political and social changes, has shown not only that those apprehensions were groundless, but that the Father of our Country was right when he declared, in a letter to the first Chief Justice of the United States, that the Judicial Department was the keystone of our political fabric. Time has grandly vindicated that declaration. All now admit that the fathers did not err when they made provision, in the fundamental law, for "one Supreme Court," with authority to determine, for the whole country, the true meaning and scope of that law. The American people, after the lapse of a century, have a firm conviction that the elimination of that court from our constitutional system would be the destruction of the government itself, upon which depends the success of the experiment of free institutions resting upon the consent of the governed. That those institutions, which have answered "the true ends of government beyond all precedent in human history," may be preserved in their integrity; that our country may, under all circumstances, be an object of supreme affection by those enjoying the blessings of our republican government; and that the court whose organization you have assembled to commemorate may, in its membership as well as in its judgments, always meet the just expectations of the people,—is the earnest wish of those to whom you have, on this occasion, done so much honor.

The foregoing seem to embody all that is of special interest for preservation in these Reports. The organization of the Court, with biographical sketches, may be found in Vol. 1, Indexed Digest of United States Supreme Court Reports.

GENERAL INDEX.

TO THE

FOUR VOLUMES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK,

131, 132, 133, 134.

ACCESSION AND CONFUSION OF GOODS.

Confusion of property does not destroy the equity to follow misapplied property, but converts it into a charge upon the entire mass, giving to the party injured by the unlawful diversion a priority of right over the other creditors of the possessor. Peters v. Bain, 696

ACTION OR SUIT. See also MORTGAGE, 7; STATE.

1. No final decree can be rendered affecting the parties to a contract sued on, without making them all parties to the suit. Gregory v. Stetson, 792

2. The contract of a purchaser to pay a mortgage, contained in the mortgagor's deed to him, being made with the mortgagor and for his benefit only, creates no direct obligation of the purchaser to the mortgagee. The mortgagee cannot sue at law; but in equity he may avail himself of the right of the mortgagor against the purchaser. Keller v. Ashford, 667

3. Failure to pay third parties certain debts assumed as the consideration of a contract gives the promisee a right of action without proof that he himself had made the payment, where the liability is fixed. Mills v. Allen, 717

4. An evicted grantee in Louisiana, who is condemned in judgment to pay the rents and revenues of the property, may, before satisfying such judgment, maintain a suit in equity against his guarantor to protect him against his adjudged liability to pay. New Orleans v. Christmas, 99

5. In equity all persons materially interested, either legally or beneficially, in the subject matter of a suit, are to be made parties to it, either as plaintiffs or defendants, so that there may be a complete decree which shall bind them all. Gregory v. Stetson, 792; Christian v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 589

6. Persons made parties defendant, who disclaim all interest in the suit and against whom no relief is sought, are unnecessary parties. Delaware County v. Diebold Safe & L. Co. 674

7. If a defendant not only had notice of an assignment of a cause of action to the plaintiff, but consented to that assignment, there would be a new and direct promise from the defendant to the plaintiff, and the assignors would not be necessary parties to the cause of action. Id.

8. Objection to nonjoinder of parties defendant does not go to the jurisdiction of the court. Id.

9. While grantees would be proper parties to a suit by the true owner against a grantor with warranty, still, where the objection of want of parties was not specially made, and as it would be a hardship to begin a suit again, the suit will not be dismissed on that ground. New Orleans v. Christmas, 99

10. Dividends due to a State cannot be seized upon and appropriated to the payment of its bonds, nor can stock held and owned by the State be so sold and transferred, through the medium of a suit in equity, without making the State a party to the suit. Christian v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 589

11. The proceedings conformed to the Act of March 8, 1875, as to bringing in an absent defendant, where, before the final decree was rendered, such defendant had been served with a copy of the several orders requiring him to appear and plead, answer, or demur to the original and supplemental bills and to the cross-bill, and was in default with respect to each order. Mellen v. Moline Malleable Iron Works, 178

12. If a sale of property was irregular, by reason of its being ordered and made before a defendant was directed to appear and plead, answer, or demur, that does not affect the jurisdiction of the court to render a final decree in respect to his interest in the property. Id.

ADMIRALTY.

1. A libel in admiralty in personam may be maintained against a corporation by attachment of its goods in a district not within the State in which it was incorporated. Re Louisville Underwriters, 991

2. In courts of admiralty, a libel in personam may be maintained for any cause within their jurisdiction, wherever a monition can be served upon the libelee, or an attachment made of any personal property or credits of his. Id.

3. The provision in the Act of Congress of March 8, 1887, chap. 373, § 1, that no civil suit shall be brought before a circuit or district court against any person in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, has no application to causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. Re Louisville Underwriters, 991

ADULTERY. See CRIMINAL LAW; DEPOSITIONS.

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

1. Where the rightful owner is in the actual occupancy of a part of his tract, he is in the constructive and legal possession and seisin of the whole, unless he is disseised by actual occupation and dispossession. Deputron v. Young, 928

2. Where the possession is mixed, the legal seisin is according to the legal title, and there can be no constructive possession in one who does not have the legal title, even if that might exist if he had actual possession of a part and no one had possession of the remainder. Id.

3. A tax deed, though void upon its face, is sufficient color of title, in Nebraska, to support an adverse possession to the property. Id.

4. When a deed founded on a sale for taxes is introduced in support of the bar of possession under the Statute of Limitations, it is of no avail if it appears upon its face and by its own terms to be absolutely void. Such a deed cannot create color of title which will bring the case within such statute. Redfield v. Parks, 827

ALIENS.

1. Citizens of France can take land in the District of Columbia by descent from citizens of the United States. De Geofroy v. Riggs, 642

2. During the continuance of the treaty of 1800 between France and this country, citizens of France could take property in the District of Columbia by inheritance from citizens of the United States. Id.

ALLUVION. See WATERS AND WATERCOURSES, 4, 5.

ANIMALS. See also PUBLIC LANDS, 18, 14.

In this country, in the progress of its settlement, the principle that a man was bound to keep his cattle confined within his own grounds, or else he would be liable for their trespasses upon the unenclosed grounds of his neighbors, was never adopted or recognized as the law of the country, except as it might refer to animals known to be dangerous. Buford v. Houtz, 618

VII. JUDGMENT AND REHEARING.

I. JURISDICTION.

a. Of Appellate Courts Generally.

1. Consent does not confer jurisdiction of the subject matter. Little v. Bowers, 1016

2. A proceeding involving the original probate of a last will and testament is not strictly a proceeding in equity, and may be brought to the United States Supreme Court upon writ of error. Ormsby v. Webb, 806

3. A suit to enforce a mechanics' lien in Idaho Territory is a suit in equity, and cannot be taken up by writ of error. Idaho & O. Land Imp. Co. v. Bradbury, 433

4. Suits in equity in the territorial courts, and actions in which the trial was not by jury, can be reviewed by the United States Supreme Court only by appeal, and not by writ of error. Id.

5. An action at law is not transformed into an equity cause for the purpose of appeal, because one of the defenses is an equitable one, where judgment is rendered for defendant on demurrer not only to that but to other legal defenses also. Brown v. Rank, 340

b. Finality of Decisions.

6. In a proceeding to set aside a sale by a trustee as fraudulent and to remove the trustee, an order denying the relief asked is an order involving the merits of the proceeding. Kenaday v. Edwards, 853

7. Where an order taking the bill as confessed by one defendant, and directing that the cause be proceeded in thenceforth ex parte as to him, was entered before the decree was made sustaining the demurrer of the other defendant and dismissing the bill as against him, that decree is final as to him, and one from which the plaintiff can appeal. Stewart v. Masterson, 114

8. A decree which grants an injunction, and orders an accounting, while the account remains to be taken is not appealable. Keystone Manufacturing & Iron Co. v. Martin, 275

9. In an action for an injunction and an accounting, and for the payment to plaintiff of what shall be found due to him on such accounting, a decree which merely enjoins the defendant and orders an accounting before a referee is not a final one, and is not appealable. Nor does it make any difference that the decree dismisses the cross-complaint of the defendant. That was not a separate suit. Winters v. Ethell, 339

10. An order in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia at special term, admitting a will to probate and record, is a final judgment reviewable by the general term. Ormsby v. Webb, 805

11. A proceeding in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia involving the validity, as a last will and testament, of an instrument offered for probate, and its admission to probate, is a "case" the final judgment in which can be reviewed in the United States Supreme Court when the value of the matter in dispute is sufficient. Id.

12. A writ of error will not lie, since the Act of 1887, to review a decree of the circuit court remanding the cause to the state court, although remanded prior to that Act. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gray, 212

13. Orders of the circuit court remanding cases to the state court are not final judgments or decrees from which an appeal will lie to the Supreme Court of the United States. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Thouron, 871

14. An order of the circuit court reviving a suit in the name of the executor of the plaintiff, on a bill of revivor, after decree therein, and ordering that the executor have the full benefit, rights, and protection of the decree, and full power to enforce the same against the defendants, is such a final decree as can be brought to the Supreme Court of the United States for review. Terry v. Sharon, 94

c. Of Supreme Court of United States.

1. Over State Courts; Federal Questions.

15. To give the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction of a writ of error to a state court, it must appear affirmatively, not only that a federal question was presented for decision to the highest court of the State having jurisdiction, but that its decision was necessary to the determination of the cause, and that it was actually decided, or that the judgment as rendered could not have been given without deciding it. Blount v. Walker, 1086

16. The Supreme Court of the United States has no jurisdiction to review a judgment of the highest court of a State, unless a federal question has been, either in express terms or by necessary effect, decided by that court against the plaintiff in error. San Francisco City & County v. Itell, 570

17. Where the supreme court of a State decides a federal question in rendering a judgment, and also decides against the plaintiff in error on an independent ground not involving a federal question and broad enough to maintain the judgment, the writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States will be dismissed without considering the federal question, although it may have been erroneously decided. Hopkins v. McLure, 660; Hale v. Akers, 442

18. In order to give the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction to review a judgment of a state court against a title or right set up or claimed under a statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, that title or right must be one of the plaintiff in error, and not of a third person only. Giles v. Little, 1062; Manning v. French, 582

19. The decision that a defendant was not liable in damages, because in concurring in the order complained of he acted in his judicial capacity, in itself involved no federal question. Manning v. French, 582

20. Where the highest court of a State did not decide any question against the plaintiff in error, except the issue whether a former judgment was a bar to the action, that was a question of general law only, in no wise depending upon the Constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States. San Francisco City & County v. Itell, 570

21. Where the contention of the plaintiffs in error, that they are entitled to an award rendered by the French and American Claims Commission, is founded upon the French treaty of 1880, the decision of the Supreme Court of Louisiana against the rights thus asserted by them presents a question for the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States. Burthe v. Denis, 768

22. The objection to a tax, that it is taking property without due process of law, and denies to the taxpayers the equal protection of the laws, raises a question under the Constitution of the United States. Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 892

23. The Supreme Court of the United States has jurisdiction to review a state judgment, where the case presents the question whether a certain state statute to which that judgment gave effect impaired the obligation of a contract arising out of a subscription by plaintiff in error to the stock of an insurance company created by the laws of Missouri. Hill v. Merchants Mut. Ins. Co., 994

24. Where it is claimed that a state law impairs a contract contained in the charter of a corporation, exempting the corporation from taxation, and an action has been brought in a state court by it to restrain the collection of taxes illegally imposed, and a decision of the state court is against the exemption claimed, the Supreme Court of the United States has jurisdiction to re-examine such decision. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Thomas, 802; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Board of Levee Comrs., 808

25. Where a state court decided that a state law taxing telegraph companies authorized and imposed a tax upon receipts derived by them from messages from or to other States, and sustained a state tax thereon under such law, the Supreme Court of the United States has jurisdiction to review such decision. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Seay, 409

2. Over Federal, District, and Territorial Courts.

26. Where the defendant below sues out the writ of error, the matter in dispute is the judgment rendered against him. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Malin, 204

27. The sum in dispute at the time of the rendition of the judgment or decree appealed from, including any interest then accrued, is the test of appellate jurisdiction, although the verdict is for a less sum. Keller v. Ashford, 667; Quebec Steamship Co. v. Merchant, 656

28. On an appeal from a decree allowing compensation to a receiver and his counsel, the allowance to his counsel is to be added to the allowance of the receiver in determining the jurisdictional amount necessary to an appeal to the United States Supreme Court. Stuart v. Boulware, 568

29. The value of the specific property which is in litigation must determine the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States. The value of a trust estate, the ownership of which is involved, is the value of the matter in dispute for the purposes of an appeal by the trustee. Kenaday v. Edwards, 858

80. Distinct decrees against distinct parties on distinct causes of action, or on a single cause of action in which there are distinct liabilities, cannot be joined to give the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction on appeal. Wheeler v. Cloyd, 1008

81. Where the amount of bonds at par value, held by any one of the respective appellants owning them, is not sufficient to give jurisdiction to review the decree below so far as it affects him, the appeal will be dismissed as to him. McMurray v. Moran, 814

82. Where a foreclosure has been had on different tracts of land claimed by different owners, and it was decreed that each owner, a defendant, could redeem the land by paying the amount his tract sold for within a year or be foreclosed, and no tract sold for as much as $5,000, several defendants cannot join in an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and consolidate the several amounts awarded against them, and therefore give the court jurisdiction. Wheeler v. Cloyd, 1008

83. Where one prosecuted a suit as a creditor, claiming more than $5,000 of a fund as applicable to a large amount of debts owned by him, that is a sufficient amount to give the United States Supreme Court jurisdiction. Stuart v. Boulware, 568

84. In an action to restrain the enforcement of a tax, where the decree of a circuit court enjoined the collection of less than $5,000 of the tax, the United States Supreme Court has no jurisdiction, although the bill alleged that certain United States bonds should also be exempted from taxation, but no attempt was made to obtain any relief on this ground, and the controversy in respect to the bonds was settled by the payment of the taxes thereon, and they were not a matter in dispute at the time of the decree. Warren v. Toledo First Nat. Bank, 201

85. Under the Act of Congress of Feb. 25, 1879, a final judgment or decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in any case where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeds the value of $2,500, may be re-examined in the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of error or appeal. Keller v. Ashford, 687

86. The Act of Congress of March 3, 1885, changing the jurisdictional sum in appeals from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia from $2,500 to $5,000, only provides for appeals or writs of error thereafter allowed, and does not cut off appeals taken before the passage of the Act. Id.

87. The Supreme Court of the United States has jurisdiction to re-examine judgments of circuit and district courts rendered under the Act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 505), although the matter in dispute does not exceed the sum or value of $5,000, exclusive of costs. United States v. Davis, 93

88. Under the Act of March 3, 1887, the district and circuit courts may exercise concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims in respect to suits against the United States, as therein provided; and the right of appeal from their judgments therein reserved to the government is the same as that reserved in the statutes relating to the Court of Claims. Id.

89. As a right of appeal could be exercised by the United States in the instance of any judgment of the Court of Claims adverse to the United States, it follows that the same right can be exercised by the United States in any case of the prosecution of a claim in the district or circuit courts of the United States, under the Act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 505). Id.

40. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 707, authorizes an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, on behalf of the United States, from all judgments of the Court of Claims adverse to the United States; and as the appeal by the United States in this case is from a judgment of $18,889.21 in favor of the claimant, it is competent for the claimant, as he also has taken an appeal from that judgment, to avail himself of anything in the case which properly shows that that judgment was not for too large a sum. And the fact that the items for the disallowance of which the claimant appealed do not amount to over $3,000 does not take away such right. United States v. Mosby, 625

41. The United States Supreme Court has jurisdiction to review a judgment of the Supreme Court of Utah, involving the question of authority exercised under the United States, within the meaning of the Act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. 448), such as an authority exercised by the governor in the appointment of an auditor of public accounts in the place of one who had been elected as such officer. Clayton v. Utah, Dickson, 455

II. TRANSFER OF CAUSE.

42. A writ of error to a judgment recovered by a State, in which the State is necessarily the defendant in error, is not a suit commenced or prosecuted against a State. Hans v. Louisiana, 842

43. A written release by a trustee of all errors had or committed in and concerning a decree, and releasing and waiving his right as such trustee to appeal from the decree in an action to foreclose a mortgage made by a railroad company to secure its bonds, in which such trustee was a party defendant as being a trustee in a second mortgage given by the company,—binds all the bondholders represented by him as such trustee. Ellwell v. Foadick, 998

44. A second appeal may be taken if the first one fails by delay in filing the record. Evans v. State Nat. Bank, 917

45. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States does not depend upon a citation being issued, where an appeal was allowed, an appeal bond executed, and the record duly filed; but the court will not hear the cause until the parties are brought into court by citation. Mendenhall v. Hall, 1012

APPEAL AND ERROR, III., IV.

46. Under the Act of Washington Territory of Nov. 23, 1888, notice of appeal may be given in open court or at chambers, and must be entered on the journal of the court; and no notice to the opposite party need be given, before application is made to the judge, of the intention of the party to give notice of appeal. Re Parker, 128

47. The proceeding as to notice of appeal may be taken at the chambers of the judge, where he can conveniently attend to business, and not necessarily within the territorial limits of his district. Id.

48. Neither the signing of the citation nor the approval of the bond is necessary to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, but it is essential that the record be filed during the term at which the appeal is returnable. Evans v. State Nat. Bank, 917

49. Where the record is not filed at the term succeeding the allowance of the appeal, the appeal ceases to have any operation or effect. Small v. Northern P. R. Co. 1006

50. A decree of the circuit court cannot be reviewed on appeal by the United States Supreme Court, unless the appeal is taken within two years after the entry of such decree, although taken within two years from the time the decree took full effect. Radford v. Folsom, 208

51. Where a second appeal is taken by its allowance by the circuit court within two years, it is operative if the second is filed during the succeeding term. Evans v. State Nat. Bank, 917

52. The waiver, by the infant's guardian ad litem and next friend, of a bond by the opposite party upon his appeal,—the latter having waived an appeal bond on his part,—did not affect the jurisdiction of the court. Kingsbury v. Buckner, 1047

53. Where the appeal was taken in open court, and no citation was necessary, and the record has been duly filed, appellant may be allowed on the hearing to file a bond nunc pro tunc. Shepherd v. Pepper, 706

54. An appeal from a decree granting, refusing, or dissolving an injunction does not disturb its operative effect. Knox County v. Harshman, 249

55. When an injunction has been dissolved, it cannot be revived except by a new exercise of judicial power; and no appeal by the dissatisfied party can, of itself, revive it. A fortiori, the mere prosecution of an appeal cannot operate as an injunction, where none has been granted. Id.

56. Where a bill in equity has been filed to enjoin the execution of a writ of mandamus issued upon a judgment at law, the supersedeure of process on the decree dismissing the bill cannot supersede process on the judgment at law, notwithstanding a bill to impeach a judgment is regarded as an auxiliary or dependent, and not as an original, bill. Id.

III. RECORD AND CASE IN APPELLATE COURT.

57. The petition for a writ of error forms no part of the record. Manning v. French, 582

58. Where a motion to dismiss for want of the clerk's signature to the authentication of a record is made after it is too late to take a new appeal or writ of error, the court may allow the certificate of authentication to be perfected by adding the signature of the clerk. Idaho & O. Land Imp. Co. v. Bradbury, 438

59. Where a cause was removed from the state court into the circuit court of the United States, upon the ground of diverse citizenship of the parties, and was tried and judgment was rendered therein in the latter court, and it is brought by writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States, if it appear from the record that the citizenship of the parties at the commencement of the action and at the time the petition for removal was filed was not sufficiently shown, and that therefore the jurisdiction of the state court was never divested,—this defect cannot be cured by amendment. Jackson v. Allen, 249

60. A statement of facts by the parties, or a finding of facts by the circuit court, is strictly analogous to a special verdict, and, in order to present any question on writ of error, must state the ultimate facts of the case, presenting questions of law only. Raimond v. Terrebonne, 309

61. The statement in a judgment affirming a refusal to grant a new trial for the third time because of a statute allowing only two new trials on the facts, that "the court adjudges that there is no evidence to support the verdict of the jury," indicates simply the opinion of the court that the jury ought not to have found the verdict that they did, and that the judgment of the court below, refusing to grant a new trial upon the facts, would have been reversed but for the existence of the statute which made it error to award it. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Woodson, 1082

62. An agreement that the parties may refer to and rely upon all the grounds of action or defense to be found in the voluminous records of two equity cases in other courts, including the pleadings and evidence and orders and decrees therein, cannot take the place of a special verdict of a jury or special finding of facts by the court, so as to enable the Supreme Court of the United States to determine the questions of law thereon arising. Glenn v. Fant, 969

63. Assignments of error in findings of fact amount in substance to the same thing as the alleged error in finding as a matter of law that the findings of fact stated could lawfully be made from the evidence admitted and considered. Hathaway v. Cambridge First Nat. Bank, 1004

64. By the practice in Washington Territory, law causes cannot be reviewed on appeal without an assignment of errors, but equity cases may be. Brown v. Rank, 840

65. If the case is not docketed and dismissed by appellee, the appellant is in time if the record be filed during the return term. Evans v. State Nat. Bank, 917

IV. OBJECTIONS AND EXCEPTIONS.

66. A general exception to the whole charge will not avail a plaintiff in error, where the charge contains distinct propositions and any one of them is free from objection. Anthony v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 801

APPEAL AND ERROR, V., VI. a.

67. While exceptions may be reduced to form and signed after the trial, they must appear affirmatively to have been taken before the jury withdrew from the bar. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Malin, 450

V. PRELIMINARY MOTIONS AND ORDERS.

68. A case may be reversed on stipulation. Arbuckle v. Quigley, 218

69. Where there is color for a motion to dismiss, the case may be disposed of upon a motion to affirm. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Woodson, 1082

70. Where the state court does not seem to have expressly passed upon a federal question, although it was clearly in the record, there is color for making a motion to dismiss in the Supreme Court of the United States. Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 892

71. A case from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia will be dismissed if the matter in dispute does not exceed $5,000, and does not involve any federal question. District of Columbia v. Brewer, 218

72. Motion by an intervening petitioner in the suit, whose appeal was dismissed, to have refunded to him $450 deposited by order of the court with the clerk, for two printed copies of the record,—granted to the extent of $200. Washburn v. Green, 516

73. When there is no actual controversy involving real and substantial rights, between the parties to the record, the case will be dismissed. Little v. Bowers, 1016

74. The fact that there is no controversy between parties to the record may be shown at any time before the decision of the case. Id.

75. The Supreme Court of the United States is compelled, as all courts are, to receive evidence dehors the record affecting the proceedings in a case before them on error or appeal,—such as the death or transfer of the interest of one of the parties. A release of errors may be filed as a bar to the writ. Ethell v. Foadick, 998

76. On motion to dismiss a writ of error brought to review a judgment granting a peremptory writ of mandamus commanding the officers of a city to levy a tax to pay a judgment against it, with which motion is united a motion to affirm the judgment, the Supreme Court of the United States will affirm the judgment if the reasons for taking the writ of error are frivolous and if it was taken for delay only, notwithstanding the court has jurisdiction. Chanute v. Trader, 845

77. Motion to dismiss an appeal on the ground that the decree from which the appeal was taken is not a final decree, and that no notice of the appeal was given or any citation issued,—granted. Wall v. District of Columbia, 211

78. Where an appeal has been dismissed, pursuant to United States Supreme Court Rule 15, § 1, the decree of dismissal may, on cause shown, be rescinded upon the proper representatives of the deceased party being made parties to the suit, and their appearance being entered under the rule. Randolph v. Quidneck Co. 208

VI. HEARING AND DETERMINATION.

a. In General.

79. This court cannot assume that the ruling of the court below sustaining an objection to a model as evidence was incorrect, where this court has no copy or description of the model, and the witness who produced it in the court below did not swear to its correctness or that it would illustrate the subject. Patrick v. Graham, 480

80. An appeal brings into the United States Supreme Court not only the final decree, but one sustaining a demurrer and plea of one defendant and dismissing the suit as to him. It was not necessary to take an appeal from the latter order until after the whole case was determined in the court below. Mendenhall v. Hall, 1012

81. An appeal to the General Term of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia from a final order of probate made in the special term, based upon the finding of a jury upon issues tried by them, brings into review before the general term and the Supreme Court of the United States all the questions of law that are properly presented by the bill of exceptions taken at the trial. Ormsby v. Webb, 805

82. On the mere review of the order reviving a suit and appointing a new party to conduct it on the part of the plaintiff, the Supreme Court of the United States will not go back and decide upon the whole question which was passed upon by the circuit court in the original decree. Terry v. Sharon, 94

83. Defendant cannot allege as error the admission of evidence introduced by himself. McGillin v. Bennett, 422

84. A plaintiff who has no right to property is not injured by a decree which fails to take it from defendant, although fraudulently acquired by the latter. Case v. Kelly, 513

85. Although the court below erred in directing a verdict for plaintiff by reason of the claim having been barred by the Statute of Limitations, yet the judgment will not be reversed if the defendant has not prosecuted a writ of error. Cleary v. Ellis Foundry Co. 473

86. The Supreme Court of the United States has appellate jurisdiction to determine whether the circuit court had original jurisdiction. Whittemore v. Amoskeag Nat. Bank, 1002

87. Although the defendant may not be allowed on appeal to question the want of testimony or the insufficiency or amount of the evidence on a decree pro confesso, he is not precluded from contesting the sufficiency of the bill, or from insisting that the averments contained in it do not justify the decree. Ohio C. R. Co. v. Central Trust Co. 561

88. Where there is neither a bill of exceptions presented for the review of a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, nor any findings of facts, nor any case stated analogous to a special verdict, stating the ultimate facts and presenting questions of law only, the Supreme Court of the United States cannot review the same. Glenn v. Pant, 969

b. Discretionary and Interlocutory Matters.

89. Like all questions of costs in courts of equity, allowances to receivers are largely discretionary, and the action of the court below is, upon appeal, treated as presumptively correct. Stuart v. Bouhuare, 568

90. The granting or denial of a change of venue, like the granting or refusing of a new trial, is a matter within the discretion of the court, not ordinarily reviewable by the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error. Kennon v. Gilmer, 110

91. The refusal to grant a change of venue on the mere affidavit of defendant's agent as to the state of public opinion in the county involves matters of fact and discretion, and is not a ruling upon a mere question of law. Id.

92. Overruling a motion for a new trial is a matter of discretion, and not a subject of exception, according to the practice of the courts of the United States. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 809

93. The refusal of the circuit court to grant a rehearing is not open to consideration in the United States Supreme Court. Boesch v. Gräff, 787

c. Questions Not Raised Below.

94. Where the subject matter belongs to the class over which a court of equity has jurisdiction, and the objection that the complainant has an adequate remedy at law is not made until the hearing in the appellate tribunal, it comes too late, even though, if taken in limine, it might have been worthy of attention. Brown v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 1021

95. The incompetency of a foreign corporation to own property in a Territory, without having complied with the provisions of the territorial law in that respect, cannot be considered in the Supreme Court of the United States, unless set up in the pleadings in the court below. Dahl v. Montana Copper Co., 825

96. Where the objections to a petition amount simply to asserting that the ground of action was imperfectly and inaccurately stated, and whatever defects, imperfections, or omissions there may have been, if not obviated by the subsequent pleadings, were cured by the verdict,—which must be assumed to have proceeded upon proof of the facts which justified it,—the objections will be disregarded. Palmer v. Arthur, 87

97. Where a national bank, when sued in a state court in a county other than that in which the bank is located, appears in a suit and makes its defense and goes to trial upon the merits, without claiming its privilege of being sued only in the county in which it is located, it waives such privilege, and cannot claim it for the first time in an appellate court. Charlotte First Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 282

d. Review of Findings of Court.

98. Where a case was tried by the circuit court without a jury, by agreement of the parties, but there is no allegation that the stipulation was in writing, as required by the statute, no error in the rulings of the court at the trial can be examined by the Supreme Court of the United States; it can only inquire whether the declaration was sufficient to sustain the judgment. Spalding v. Manasse, 86

99. The refusal of the court to find immaterial or incidental facts amounting only to evidence bearing on the ultimate facts found is not a proper subject of review. Hathaway v. Cambridge First Nat. Bank, 1004

100. Errors in the findings of fact by the court are not subject to revision by the Supreme Court of the United States, if there was any evidence upon which such findings could be made. Id.

101. Where the finding of the district court upon a mere question of fact was affirmed by the circuit court, on appeal the United States Supreme Court will not reverse such finding, unless the error is clear. Dravo v. Fabel, 421

102. No judgment or decree of the highest court of a Territory can be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States in matter of fact, but only in matter of law. Sturr v. Beck, 761

103. If the whole evidence is recited in the statement of the case, this court can consider it only for the purpose of passing upon the exceptions taken to the admission or rejection of parts of it, and not for the purpose of deciding whether the whole evidence supports the findings of the court. Idaho & O. Land Imp. Co. v. Bradbury, 488

e. What Errors will Warrant Reversal.

104. Testimony which is immaterial, and which could have done no harm, is not ground for reversal. Klein v. Hoffheimer, 378

105. Where, in the charge to the jury, there was no material error to the injury of the party excepting, the court will not consider whether the language used in the charge was technically accurate. Henderson Bridge Co. v. McGrath, 984

106. The refusal of the court to give certain instructions is not error where the same instructions were substantially given, though in different language. Patrick v. Graham, 480

107. Where the circuit court had no jurisdiction in a case, but dismissed the bill upon another ground, the decree was reversed, with a direction to dismiss the bill for want of jurisdiction. Whittemore v. Amoskeag Nat. Bank, 1002

108. Where the court entered an absolute judgment for a lesser sum than that awarded by the jury, instead of ordering that a judgment for that sum should be entered if the plaintiff elected to remit the rest of the damages, and that if he did not so remit there should be a new trial of the whole case,—each party is prejudiced, and either is entitled to have the judgment reversed. Kennon v. Gilmer, 110

VII. JUDGMENT AND REHEARING.

109. A judgment will be affirmed, with costs, when the court is equally divided. Bauer v. Texas & P. R. Co., 309

110. Where it is apparent that the writ of error could only have been sued out for purposes of delay, the judgment will be affirmed, with 10 per cent damages, interest, and costs. Palmer v. Arthur, 87

111. Where it appears to the United States Supreme Court that the case is one which is not removable, and of which the circuit court should not have taken jurisdiction, it is the duty of that court to reverse any judgment given below and remand the cause, with costs against the party who wrongfully invoked the jurisdiction of the circuit court. Graves v. Corbin, 463

112. Where a decree of the inferior court was rendered in conformity with the mandate of the Supreme Court of Illinois, it is beyond the control of the latter court when questioned upon a second appeal in the same case. Kingsbury v. Buckner, 1047

118. Leave to file a motion for rehearing after the close of the term at which judgment was rendered, and upon the same reasons once overruled, will not be given. Williams v. Conger, 201

ARMY AND NAVY. See also WAR.

1. The Act of Congress of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat. 815), is a grant of a general power to the President to reduce the number of officers of the army by selecting the best and mustering out the residue. Street v. United States, 681

2. The power of the President to muster out supernumerary officers that might remain after Jan. 1, 1879, was not limited to those who were such at the close of that day, but could be exercised as to an officer placed on that list on the day following. Id.

3. Proceedings initiated against an officer of the army, under the Act of Congress of July 15, 1870, § 11, could be abandoned and the officer mustered out, under § 12, without an adjudication of unfitness. Id.

4. The term of office of a midshipman in the United States navy is not a term for life. Crenshaw v. United States, 825

5. An officer of the navy appointed for a definite time or during good behavior has no vested interest or contract right in his office, of which Congress cannot deprive him. Id.

6. A cadet of the Naval Academy, while taking a two years' course afloat as a part of the academic course, remains a member of the Academy, and is not a graduate. Id.

7. The Naval Appropriation Act of Congress of 1882, changing the name of appointees of the Naval Academy and modifying the scope of their duties, but not undertaking to name the incumbent of any office, is not invalid as assuming the power of appointment which belongs to the Executive. Id.

ASSIGNMENT.

1. An assignment of a patent absolute in form conveys the legal title, which is not defeated by a subsequent conditional contract that, if the payments are not made, the title is to return to the assignor, particularly where the payments are made in full. Boesch v. Gräff, 787
1116

2. It is against public policy to permit municipal corporations, in the administration of their affairs relating to the construction of public works, to be embarrassed by subcontracts between their contractors and third persons, to which they have never assented. Delaware County v. Diebold Safe & Lock Co. 674

3. A partial assignment of a contract to construct a jail for a county and furnish materials therefor, at a gross sum,—that is to say, an assignment of the furnishing and putting in place the iron work of the jail,—is not binding on the county without its assent. Id.

4. When rights arising out of contract are coupled with obligations to be performed by the contractor, and involve such a relation of personal confidence that it must have been intended that the rights should be exercised and the obligations performed by him alone, the contract, including both his rights and his obligations, cannot be assigned without the consent of the other party to the original contract. Id.

ASSUMPSIT. See also DURESS, 2-6.

1. At common law the person who receives the rent and profits is the only person who is to respond for them. New Orleans v. Christmas, 99

2. An action founded on an implied obligation to reimburse plaintiff for defendant's breach of duty imposed by statute, and the required performance of that duty by the plaintiff in consequence, is an action of assumpsit. Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 281

3. Where money is paid to another under the influence of a mistake,—that is, upon the supposition that a specific fact is true which would entitle the other to the money, but which fact is untrue,—and the money would not have been paid if it had been known to the payer that the fact was untrue, an action will lie to recover it back. United States v. Barlow, 346

4. A mere mistake in the estimate of the value of an uncertain and speculative subject is not sufficient to authorize the recovery of money paid upon the erroneous estimate. Id.

5. Where an allowance for expediting the mail service over a new route was made upon fraudulent representations, the money paid therefor may be recovered, although the fraud was not participated in or countenanced by the officers of the department who acted in the matter. Id.

6. Where allowance was made to contractors for expedited mail service, upon a clear mistake of fact as to what additional men and animals were required for such service, and the money was paid in ignorance of the fact that no additional number had been employed in that service, the United States may recover the moneys paid on such allowance. Id.

7. Where a party pays an illegal demand, with a full knowledge of all the facts which render such demand illegal, without an immediate and urgent necessity therefor, unless to release his person or property from detention, or to prevent an immediate seizure of his person or property, such payment must be deemed voluntary, and cannot be recovered back. And the fact that the party, at the time of making the payment, files a written protest, does not make the payment voluntary. Little v. Bowers, 101

ATTORNEY-GENERAL. See also DISTRICT ATTORNEY, 2.

The supervisory power given to the attorney-general by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 368, does not include the power of reviewing the discretion of a judge in making allowances, or of altering his orders and decrees therein. United States v. Waters, 594

BANKER. See INTERNAL REVENUE, 1-3.

BANKRUPTCY. See also LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 12.

1. An adjudication of the bankruptcy of a firm and of the members in whose name the firm was doing business, in a bankrupt proceeding affecting them alone, to which a special partner was not a party, does not estop a copartnership creditor from setting up the liability of such special partner imposed upon him by the statute for noncompliance with its provisions. Abendroth v. Van Dolsen, 57

2. The pendency of proceedings in bankruptcy against a firm is not a good plea in abatement in an action against a special partner of the firm against whom the proceedings are not taken; the latter therefore is not entitled to a stay of proceedings in the action, which the statute gives for the protection of the bankrupt. Id.

3. A discharge in bankruptcy does not release any person liable for the same debt with the bankrupt, either as partner, joint contractor, surety, or otherwise. Id.

4. Where an assignee in bankruptcy sold land recovered by him as the property of the bankrupt, and deeded the same to the purchaser, and put him in possession, those having liens on the land, not having been made parties to the proceedings in the bankruptcy court, or proved their claims there, may afterwards foreclose their liens in the state court, making the bankrupt, his assignee in bankruptcy, and the purchaser, parties defendant. Adams v. Conner, 623

BANKS AND BANKING. See also BILLS AND NOTES, 2; CHECKS; PAYMENT, 1; TAXES, 2, 4, 5.

1. A banker who is, to his own knowledge, hopelessly insolvent, cannot honestly continue his business and receive the money of his customers; and, although having no actual intent to cheat and defraud a particular customer, he will be held to have intended the inevitable consequence of his act, which is to cheat and defraud all persons whose money he receives and whom he fails to pay before he is compelled to stop business. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston, 683

2. An acceptance of a deposit of drafts by a bank irretrievably insolvent constitutes such a fraud as entitles the depositor to reclaim his drafts or their proceeds. Id.

3. A deposit ticket made by the assistant cashier of a bank for the use of the officers of the bank, and not seen or assented to by the depositor, does not change the terms of the deposit as between the bank and the depositor. Armstrong v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 747

4. A bank receiving a certificate of deposit is bound to honor the checks of the person named therein drawn on the fund, and cannot refuse to pay them on the ground that such person intends to make an improper use of the money, such as to pay a gambling debt. Id.

5. A letter of advice, or statement, written by the cashier of one bank to another bank, stating that a person therein named has deposited with the former bank a sum of money, therein stated, to the credit of the latter bank for the use of another, is a certificate of deposit. Id.

6. A bank to whose credit moneys were stated to be deposited, by receiving the certificate of deposit and applying it to the use of the person directed therein, became an innocent purchaser for value of the certificate, and the bank writing it became indebted in its amount to the bank receiving it. Id.

7. The exemption of national banks from suits in state courts elsewhere than in the county or city in which such banks are located was prescribed for the convenience of such banks, and is a privilege which they can waive. Charlotte First Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 282

8. The proviso of § 4 of the Act of July 12, 1882, refers only to suits by or against national banks brought after the passage of that Act, and does not apply to a suit brought before its passage. Id.

9. Where stock of a national bank was lawfully created, and the defendant subscribed for shares and paid for them, and received his certificate, he became a stockholder, and when the bank went into liquidation he became liable, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5151, to pay an amount equal to the stock so held by him for debts of the bank. Aspinwall v. Butler, 779

10. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5142, is not violated by an issue of the exact amount of stock that was paid in; it was intended to prevent what is called watering of stock. Id.

11. Where the directors of a national bank passed a resolution to increase its stock, giving its stockholders the right to take the new stock to an amount equal to that then held by them, the fact that some of the new stock is not taken is not sufficient ground for a particular stockholder to repudiate his new stock taken by him and withdraw the amount paid therefor, and to exempt him as a shareholder from statutory liability to creditors. Id.

12. A shareholder of a national bank cannot transfer his shares when the corporation is failing, or manipulate a release therefrom, so as to escape his individual liability for its debts; but the existence of this liability does not prevent assignors from a lawful disposition of their property for the benefit of their creditors. Peters v. Bain, 696

13. The record of transfers of stock upon the books of a bank was sufficient, as between the assignee and the bank, to work a change of ownership without new certificates. Keyser v. Hitz, 581

14. A married woman is not exempted, by reason of her coverture, from the liability imposed by Congress upon shareholders in national banks. Id.

15. If a married woman became aware of transfers of bank stock to her after they were made, and thereafter received the dividends, she became a shareholder and liable for the debts of the bank, as fully as if the transfers had been made originally with her knowledge and consent. Id.

16. The intent with which a husband caused transfers of stock of a bank to be made to his wife is wholly immaterial, even if the object was to conceal his property from creditors. If she became the owner of the stock, she would be liable to be assessed as a shareholder. Id.

17. After the passage of the Act of 1876, savings banks organized in the District of Columbia under an Act of Congress, and having a capital stock paid up in whole or in part, were entitled to become national banking associations, in the mode and subject to the conditions prescribed by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5154. Id.

18. An agreement made by the president of a national bank, after the bank went into liquidation, to continue its guarantee upon certain notes, is not binding upon the stockholders. Schrader v. Manufacturers Nat. Bank, 564

19. The power of the president or other officer of a national bank to bind it by transactions after it is put into liquidation is that resulting from his duty, which consists in the collection and reduction to money of the assets of the bank, and the payment of creditors equally and ratably, so far as the assets prove sufficient. Id.

20. The individual liability of the stockholders of national banks, as imposed by and expressed in the statute, is for all the contracts, debts, and engagements of such bank, but is restricted to such contracts, debts, and engagements as have been duly contracted in the ordinary course of its business. Id.

21. Payment of creditors in liquidating the affairs of a national bank may be made in the bills receivable and other assets of the bank in specie, and the title to such paper may be transferred by the president or cashier by an indorsement suitable to the purpose, in the name of the bank, but such indorsement and use of the name of the bank is in liquidation and merely for the purpose of transferring title. Id.

22. Creditors who made settlements after a national bank was put into liquidation, and received from the president in that settlement paper of the bank, or the individual notes of the president himself, indorsed or guaranteed in the name of the bank, are not such creditors of the bank as can subject the stockholders to individual liability. Id.

BIGAMY.

1. Bigamy and polygamy are crimes by the laws of all civilized and Christian countries, 1118 and the First Amendment to the Constitution, that Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or forbidding the free exercise thereof, cannot be invoked as a protection against legislation for their punishment. Davis v. Beason, 637

2. The statute of Congress of March 22, 1882, in reference to bigamy, does not restrict the legislation of the Territories over kindred offenses, or over the means of their ascertainment and prevention. Id.

BILLS AND NOTES. See also CONTRACTS, 20; PAYMENT, 2, 3.

1. A draft drawn in Ohio upon a bank in New York, and payable in New York, is a foreign bill of exchange. Armstrong v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 747

2. Where a draft is deposited with a bank by the holder, and the bank places the draft to the depositor's credit as cash, and pays his checks drawn on it, the bank becomes the owner of the draft for value. Id.

3. In a suit on a bill of exchange by the payee against the drawer, want of consideration from the purchaser of the bill cannot be shown, if the payee is a bona fide holder for value, the purchaser not being the drawer's agent in delivering the bill to the payee. Id.

4. The fact that a draft is payable to the order of a bank is not notice to the bank that the holder is not its purchaser or remitter, so as to prevent it from being a bona fide holder. Id.

5. Whenever negotiable paper has passed into the hands of a party, unaffected by previous infirmities, its character as an available security is established, and its holder can transfer it to others with the like immunity. Scotland County v. Hill, 261

2. The power of a town to subscribe for stock does not of itself include the power to issue bonds of the town in payment of it. Hill v. Memphis, 887

3. A municipality has no power to issue its negotiable bonds in aid of a railroad, except by legislative permission. Young v. Clarendon Twp., 356

4. The Missouri Act of Feb. 9, 1857, to incorporate the Alexandria & Bloomfield Railroad Company, gives no authority to any town of the State to issue bonds for stock subscribed by it. Hill v. Memphis, 887 was, when he signed them, a private citizen, they are not valid. Coler v. Cleburne, 146

6. Where the statute provides that it shall be the duty of the mayor, whenever any bonds are issued, to forward them to the comptroller of public accounts of the State for registry, the comptroller can receive them lawfully for registry only from such mayor. Id.

7. Where the statute provides that the bonds of a city shall be signed by the mayor, they must be signed by the person who is mayor of the city when they are signed, and not by any other person; and the city council cannot authorize them to be signed by another person. Id.

8. Where it is, by statute, made the duty of the mayor, and not that of any other person, at the time of forwarding bonds to the comptroller for registration, to furnish him with the statement specified in the statute, no other person than such mayor can furnish the comptroller with such statement. Id.

9. Bonds of a town in Michigan, delivered to the state treasurer under the Michigan Act of March 22, 1869, as trustee for the town and for the railroad company for which they were issued, which were never indorsed and delivered by him to the company as required by said Act, never became operative. Young v. Clarendon Twp. 356

10. The Constitution of the State controls the construction of the Missouri Act of March 24, 1868, and the General Railroad Law, § 17, and prevents the issue of any bonds by a town of the State without the previous assent of two thirds of its voters, expressed at an election, general or special, called for that purpose. Hill v. Memphis, 887

11. Where a majority of the taxpayers of a town are authorized by statute to incur the property of all in aid of a railroad or other corporation, the record must show that the statutory authority has been pursued. Rich v. Mentz, 1074

12. It was essential, in order to confer authority upon a town to create and issue its bonds, under the New York Laws of 1869 and 1871, that the adjudication or judgment of the county judge should declare, in substance, that the quorum of taxpayers who desired that the town should create and issue its bonds was one exclusive of taxpayers who were assessed or taxed for dogs or highway tax only. Id.

13. A petition of taxpayers of a town in New York to the county judge, under N. Y. Laws 1869, chap. 907, as amended by N. Y. Laws 1871, chap. 925, which only alleges that the petitioners "are a majority of the taxpayers" and represent "a majority of the taxable property" therein, is not sufficient to authorize the county judge to take jurisdiction and render an adjudication authorizing the town to issue its bonds in aid of a railroad company. The petition should state, in substance, that the taxpayers petitioning were a majority of taxpayers of the town who were taxed or assessed for property, not including those taxed for dogs or highway tax only. Id.

14. Where commissioners to issue town bonds were duly appointed, the issue of bonds was no larger than authorized by statute, and a paper purporting to contain the consent of the requisite number of taxpayers, duly certified, was filed with the county clerk, the defenses that the consent roll did not in fact contain the requisite number of taxpayers, and that the verifying affidavit was false, and that the commissioners did not borrow money on the bonds, but disposed of them without consideration, are unavailing against bona fide holders. Bernards Twp. v. Morrison, 728

15. When both the legislative and executive departments of a State give notice to the world that a county within the territorial limits of the State has been duly organized and exists with full power of contracting, a purchaser can in open market safely purchase the securities of such county, so far as any question about the validity of the municipal organization is concerned. Comanche County v. Lewis, 604

16. The recital in the bond of a county, which shows a compliance in all substantial respects with the statute giving authority to issue the bonds, makes the bond valid in the hands of a bona fide holder. Id.

17. The official certificate of the auditor of Kansas that county bonds had been regularly and legally issued, that the signatures were genuine, and that the bonds had been duly registered in his office in accordance with the Act of the Legislature of March 2, 1872, estops the county. Id.

18. Recitals in county bonds that they are issued, under authority of a certain Act authorizing them, for construction of bridges, are sufficient although the particular bridge for the building of which the bonds were to be issued is not specified. Id.

19. Even bona fide purchasers of municipal bonds must take the risk of the official character of those who execute them. Coler v. Cleburne, 146

20. The ownership of the coupons of county bonds by any prior holder, under such circumstances as would protect that holder against any defense by the county, entitles a subsequent purchaser to recover, even if he, when afterwards purchasing them, had knowledge of a suit involving their validity. Scotland County v. Hill, 261

21. Purchasers of negotiable securities are not chargeable with constructive notice of the pendency of a suit affecting their title and validity, but those who buy such securities from litigating parties, with actual notice of the suit, do so at their peril, and must abide the result the same as the parties from whom they got their title. Id.

22. Bondholders may be deemed holders for value, although they took the bonds in payment of, or as security for, pre-existing debts. McMurray v. Moran, 814

23. If holders of bonds paid value for them without actual notice of the restriction by a contract upon authority to issue them, they will be deemed bona fide holders for value, unaffected by the agreement. Id.

24. Judgment upon coupons of bonds of Jackson County, Missouri, issued on behalf of Van Buren Township to the Lexington, Lake,

& Gulf Railroad Company, rendered in favor of plaintiff for the amount of the coupons,—affirmed by operation of law, the court being divided. Jackson County v. New York Ninth Nat. Bank, 207

BOUNDARIES. See also WATERS AND WATERCOURSES, 5.

1. Meander lines are run in surveying public lands bordering upon navigable rivers, not as boundaries of the tract, but to ascertain the quantity of the land subject to sale; and the watercourse, and not the meander line as actually run on the land, is the boundary. Jeffers v. East Omaha Land Co. 872

2. Where a water line is the boundary of a given lot, that line, no matter how it shifts, remains the boundary; and a deed describing the lot by number or name conveys the land up to such shifting line exactly as it does up to a fixed side line, and conveys all accretion thereto. Id.

BROKERS. See CONTRACTS, 21.

CARRIERS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8-10.

1. Where a contract to carry the plaintiff as a passenger by a railroad company was an express one signed by the plaintiff and the company's agent, and was contained in a ticket for a passage to the place of destination and back, the plaintiff, having assented to the contract by accepting and signing it, was bound by the conditions expressed in it, whether he did or did not read them or know what they were. Boylan v. Hot Springs R. Co. 290

2. Where an unstamped ticket gave a passenger no right to a return passage, and he refused to pay the usual fare upon a demand by the conductor, as there was no contract in force between him and the company to carry him back, there could be no breach of the contract; and an action of assumpsit cannot be maintained to recover damages for plaintiff's expulsion from the company's train. Id.

3. Where, by the express conditions of the plaintiff's contract, he had no right to a return passage under his ticket, unless it bore the signature and stamp of the company's agent at the end of the route, no agent or employé of the company was authorized to alter or waive any condition of the contract, and therefore the action of a baggage-master in punching the ticket and checking plaintiff's baggage, and that of a gateman in admitting him to the return train, could not bind the company to carry him, or estop it to deny his right to be carried. Id.

4. The power to regulate a carrier's rates is not a power to destroy, and limitation is not the equivalent of confiscation. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, Minn. R. R. & W. Co. 970

5. The question of the reasonableness of a rate of charge for transportation by a railroad company is eminently a question for judicial investigation, requiring due process of law for its determination. Id.

6. The grant of power by a charter, to the directors of a railroad company, to make needful rules and regulations touching the rates of toll and the manner of collecting the same, does not deprive the State of its general authority itself to regulate the rates of toll to be collected by the company. Id.

7. A judgment against a railroad company for the value of a trunk and the jewelry contained therein, checked to a traveling agent or drummer, but belonging to his principal, and destroyed by fire through the company's negligence,—affirmed by reason of a divided court, the judgment being in favor of an insurer of the property to whom the claim for the loss was assigned. Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Switzerland M. Ins. Co. 204

CASES CERTIFIED.

1. The question certified to the Supreme Court of the United States upon a difference of opinion between the judges of the circuit court must be a distinct point or proposition of law, clearly stated, so that it can be definitely answered without regard to the other issues of law or fact in the case. United States v. Perrin, 88; United States v. Reilly, 75; United States v. Hall, 97

2. A question certified in a form disapproved of by the Supreme Court of the United States will not be answered; such as the question whether an offense against the United States, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5467, is charged in either the first or third count of the indictment. United States v. Lacher, 1080

3. It never was designed that because a case is a troublesome one, or is a new one, and because the judges trying the case may not be perfectly satisfied as regards all the points raised in the course of the trial, the whole matter should be referred to the United States Supreme Court for its decision, in advance of a regular trial. United States v. Perrin, 88

4. In cases which come to the Supreme Court of the United States for review it is only an appellate court, except in the limited class of cases where it has original jurisdiction. Id.

CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT. See BANKS AND BANKING, 5.

CHECKS.

The holder of a bank check cannot sue the bank for refusing payment, without proof that it was accepted by the bank or charged against the drawer; but the depositor can sue for a breach of the contract to honor his checks. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston, 688

CIVIL RIGHTS. See COMMERCE, 2.

CLAIMS.

1. The Act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 505), to provide for the bringing of suits against the government of the United States, does not authorize suits for equitable relief, by specific performance, to compel the issue and delivery of a patent for land. In the point of providing only for money decrees and money judgments the law is unchanged, merely being so extended as to include claims for money arising out of equitable and maritime, as well as legal, demands. United States v. Jones, 90; United States v. Drew, 93

2. Public officers, upon the question of their compensation and the payment of money into the treasury, are not bound, in order to save their rights, to place themselves in antagonism to the accounting officers of the department, suffer themselves to be sued, and incur the odium, for the time, of being in default, but have the right to pay into the treasury the disputed moneys, and then seek the courts to adjust and determine their claims against their superior and sovereign. Such payment is not an estoppel against the claimant. United States v. Mosby, 625

3. The French and American Claims Commission possessed no authority to consider any claims against the government of either the United States or of France, except as held, both at the time of their presentation and of judgment thereon, by citizens of the other country. Burthe v. Denis, 768

4. A French citizen having a claim against the United States having died, the French and American Claims Commission could only allow, under the treaty of 1880, the proportion of the claim going to such of his heirs and legatees as are citizens of France; and such Commission having allowed a part of such claim, the whole sum allowed must be paid to such French heirs and legatees, and cannot be equally distributed to them and other heirs and legatees of the claimant who are citizens of the United States. Id.

CLOUD ON TITLE. See also COURTS, 21.

1. A person who has received a conveyance of the legal title to real estate from his debtor may institute other proceedings against that debtor in relation to the same property, to strengthen his title or establish his lien. Bradley v. Clafin, 867

2. Where tax deeds appear upon their face to be clouds upon the plaintiff's title, a bill in equity is the proper form of obtaining relief. Gage v. Kaufman, 725

COMMERCE. See also TAXES, 19.

1. There is a commerce wholly within the State, which is not subject to the constitutional provision, and a distinction between commerce among States and between the citizens of a single State, conducted between its lines. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 784

2. A state statute which requires railroads to provide separate accommodations for the white and colored races is within the power of the State, and is not a regulation of interstate commerce. Id.

COMMISSIONER.

1. A commissioner of the United States circuit court has no authority to administer an oath to a deputy United States surveyor, as to his services, and make a certificate thereto. United States v. Reilly, 75

2. The approval of a commissioner's account by a circuit court of the United States, under the Act of Feb. 22, 1875 (18 Stat. 333), is prima facie evidence of the correctness of the items of that account, and, in the absence of clear and unequivocal proof of mistake on the part of the court, is conclusive. United States v. Jones, 1007

3. A commissioner of the United States circuit court is entitled to the fee of $5 a day for hearing and deciding motions upon bail and the sufficiency thereof, and for the continuance of cases before him. Id.

COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT.

1. A compromise made by a debtor firm with a creditor cannot be assailed on the ground that the agent of the firm in the compromise omitted to disclose the financial ability of a partner of the firm to pay the debts of the firm. Cleveland v. Smith, 884

2. A defendant having accepted a ditch made by plaintiff as completed, and used it, and made a settlement therefor, cannot, in an action to enforce a lien thereon for the sums due on such settlement, object that the ditch was made wider and deeper than agreed. Idaho & O. Land Imp. Co. v. Bradbury, 483

3. Where an insolvent firm, in consideration of a compromise with some of its creditors at 60 cents on a dollar, executed to them an agreement not to pay voluntarily to any creditor to exceed 60 cents on a dollar in settlement, a payment of more than 60 per cent—to wit, 80 per cent—to a creditor to settle a suit brought by him on a debt against the firm, in which there was no defense, which was about to be tried, and in which a judgment for the full amount would be recovered, and where the debt was secured by attachment,—was not a voluntary payment. Cleveland v. Smith, 884

COMPTROLLER OF CURRENCY.

A deputy comptroller of the currency may exercise the powers and discharge the duties attached to the office of comptroller during a vacancy of that office, or during the absence or inability of the comptroller. Keyser v. Hits, 581

CONFISCATION.

1. Nothing but the offender's life interest in the land is forfeited under the Confiscation Act of 1862. His power to dispose of the land was suspended by his disability as an offender against the United States. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Bosworth, 550

2. Where land of one who bore arms in the Confederate army, against the United States, in the late war, was, under the Confiscation Act of July 17, 1862, condemned and sold, he was, by the special pardon and by the Amnesty Proclamation of the President, restored to the control and power of distribution over the fee simple in reversion of the land expectant upon the termination of the confiscated estate therein. Id.

3. On being restored to all his rights by pardon, one who bore arms in the Confederate army against the United States was restored to the residuary ownership of the land, subject to the usufruct of the purchaser under the confiscation proceedings; and a subsequent conveyance, by him and his wife, of all their right and title in and to said land, transferred the land as against his heirs. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Bosworth, 550

CONFLICT OF LAWS. See also INTERJUNCTION.

1. The disposition of immovable property, whether by deed, descent, or any other mode, is exclusively subject to the government within whose jurisdiction the property is situated. Arndt v. Griggs, 918

2. The law of the State where the subject of a contract is situated, and where the contract was made and the suit to enforce it brought against a resident, governs in expounding and enforcing the contract and as to the rule of damages for a breach of it. Mills v. Allen, 717

CONFUSION. See ACCESSION AND CONFUSION OF GOODS.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. See also INTOXICATING LIQUORS, 1; NEW TRIAL, 8; TAXES, 1.

1. The first eight articles of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States have reference to powers exercised by the government of the United States, and not to those of the States. Eilenbecker v. Plymouth County Dist. Ct., 801

2. The original United States Constitution, art. 3, § 2, cl. 3, that the trial of all crimes, except cases of impeachment, shall be by jury, does not apply to state courts. Id.

3. A statute changing the provisions as to persons sentenced to death, by providing for their solitary confinement until execution, makes an additional punishment which constitutes the statute an ex post facto law, so far as it relates to crimes previously committed. Re Medley, 935

4. Any law which is passed after the commission of the offense for which the party is being tried is an ex post facto law, when it inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime at the time it was committed, or which alters the situation of the accused to his disadvantage. Id.

5. The new power of fixing any day and hour during a period of a week for the execution, given by an Act to the warden of the penitentiary, being a departure from the law as it existed before, and with its secrecy causing increased mental anxiety to the prisoner, amounts to an increase of punishment and renders the law ex post facto and void, so far as it relates to crimes committed before its passage. Id.

6. A bill in chancery is one of the recognized processes of law for re-examining a judgment and enjoining its execution, and is, in its form, due process of law. Freeland v. Williams, 198

7. A proceeding by which a fine and imprisonment are imposed upon parties for contempt in violating an injunction regularly issued in a suit to which they were parties, without trial by jury, is due course of law, whether the contempt occurred in the course of a criminal proceeding or of a civil suit. Eilenbecker v. Plymouth County Dist. Ct., 801

8. If a carrier is deprived of the power of charging reasonable rates for the use of its property, and such deprivation takes place in the absence of a judicial investigation, it is deprived of the use of its property, and, in effect, of the property itself, without due process of law and in violation of the Constitution of the United States. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, Minn. R. R. & W. Co., 970

9. Where no hearing is provided for, no summons or notice to a carrier, before a railroad commission has found what it is to find and declared what it is to declare as to rates to be charged, and no opportunity provided for the company to introduce witnesses before the commission, there is not the semblance of due process of law. Id.

10. A law which allows a railroad commission to establish rates for railroads which are final, without issue made or inquiry had as to their reasonableness, and forbids the courts to stay the hands of the commission if the rates established by it are unreasonable and unequal, conflicts with the Constitution of the United States, because it deprives the company of its right to a judicial investigation by due process of law, and substitutes therefor, as an absolute finality, the action of a railroad commission, which is not clothed with judicial functions and does not possess the machinery of a court of justice. Id.

11. The process of taxation does not require the same kind of notice as is required in a suit at law. It involves no violation of due process of law when it is executed according to customary forms and established usages. Bell's Gap. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 892

12. Commitment for failure to pay a tax, not resorted to until other means of collection have failed, and then only upon a showing of property possessed, not accessible to levy, but enabling the owner to pay if he chooses, is not in conflict with the constitutional provision as to due process of law. Palmer v. McMahon, 772

13. When the law provides for a mode of confirming or contesting assessment of taxes, with due notice to the person assessed, and for a review, the assessment does not deprive the owner of his property without due process of law. Id.

14. The intention of U. S. Const. art. 4, § 2, was to confer on the citizens of the several States a general citizenship, and to communicate all the privileges and immunities which the citizens of any State would be entitled to under the like circumstances; and this includes the right to institute actions. Cole v. Cunningham, 538

CONTEMPT. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 7.

1. Under the Act of Congress of 1789, the question whether particular acts constitute a contempt is to be determined according to the rules and principles of the common law. Re Savin, 150

181, 182, 183, 184 U. S.

2. Courts have power to punish in a summary manner the disobedience of any party to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of the court. Eilenbecker v. Plymouth County Dist. Ct. 801

3. Attempting, while a witness is in the witness-room or in the hallway of the court-room, to deter him from testifying, by offering him money, is a misbehavior in the presence of the court, and punishable, without indictment, by fine and imprisonment, as a contempt. Re Savin, 150

4. Where the charge against a person is that he endeavored, by forbidden means, to influence or impede a witness from testifying, the offense charged is punishable by indictment; yet the court may punish him for a contempt, if the offense was committed in its presence or so near as to obstruct the administration of justice. Id.

5. Approaching a person summoned as a juror, with a view of improperly influencing his actions in the event of his being sworn as a juror in the case, if done in the presence of the court, is a contempt, punishable by fine or imprisonment, at the discretion of the court, without indictment. Re Cuddy, 154

6. Proceedings according to the common law for contempt of court are not subject to the right of trial by jury. Eilenbecker v. Plymouth County Dist. Ct. 801

7. Under the Revised Statutes, courts of the United States have power to proceed summarily for contempt. Re Savin, 150

8. The courts of the United States have power to punish for contempts of court committed in the presence of the said courts, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice. Id.

9. A federal court, immediately upon the commission in its presence of a contempt, may proceed upon its own knowledge of the facts and punish the offender, without further proof and without issue or trial in any form. Id.

10. The court, when in session, is present in every part of the place set apart for its own use and for the use of its officers, jurors, and witnesses; and misbehavior anywhere in such place is misbehavior in the presence of the court. Id.

11. The court is not bound to require service of interrogatories upon a person charged with contempt, so that in answering them he could purge himself of the contempt charged; but it can, in its discretion, adopt such mode of determining that question as it deems proper, provided due regard is had to the rules that obtain in the trial of matters of contempt. Id.

12. Although a person charged with contempt was entitled, of right, to purge himself, under oath, of the contempt, yet it is sufficient that he was informed of the nature of the charges against him by the testimony of a witness taken down by a sworn stenographer at the preliminary examination, and that he was present at the hearing of the contempt, was represented by counsel, testified under oath in his own behalf, and had full opportunity to make his defense. Id.

I. IN GENERAL; CONSTRUCTION; PERFORMANCE; RELIEF AGAINST.

1. Where the terms of a contract were: "These goods to be exactly the same quality as we make for the De Witt Wire Cloth Company and as per sample bbls. delivered,"—the goods that were in fact made for the last-named company, not what were agreed to be made, were the standard. De Witt v. Berry, 896

2. Whether the representative of a company had authority to make a contract or not is immaterial on the question of the company's liability on a quantum meruit for work done under his direction, where he had clearly power to direct the work. Henderson Bridge Co. v. McGrath, 934

3. Where a person has agreed to procure the discharge of liens upon property, the fact that he procures a discharge of the liens by paying only a percentage thereof does not prevent such discharge being a fulfillment of his agreement. Dent v. Ferguson, 242

4. Time may be made of the essence of the contract by the express stipulations of the parties, or it may arise by implication from the very nature of the property or the avowed objects of the seller or the purchaser. Cheney v. Libby, 818

5. Where the parties specify the time of the performance, and declare that "time and punctuality are material and essential ingredients" in the contract, and that it must be "strictly and literally" executed, however harsh and exacting its terms may be, the court will not refuse to give effect to them. Id.

6. The provision in a contract forbidding its modification or change, "except by entry thereon in writing signed by both parties," coupled with the provision that no court should relieve plaintiff from a failure to comply strictly and literally with the contract, cannot be applied where the efficient cause of his failure to comply strictly and literally with the contract was the conduct of the other party. Id.

7. It is the duty of persons dealing with public officers to inquire as to their power and authority to bind the government; and persons so dealing are held to a recognition of the fact that government agents are bound to fairness and good faith as between themselves and their principal. Hume v. United States, 393

8. If claimant knew that a clerical error had been made in the contract, of which the agents of the government were ignorant, or if, under the facts, he must have known that their action in making the contract was in violation of their duty, the character of the fraud is not changed by the fact that such action was the result of a mistake or negligence of such agents. Id.

CONTRACTS, II.

9. If a contract be unreasonable and unconscionable, but not void for fraud, a court of law will give to the party who sues for its breach damages, not according to its letter, but only such as he is equitably entitled to. Hume v. United States, 398

10. Where claimant made a written contract with the United States to furnish to a government hospital a quantity of shucks at the rate of 60 cents per pound, based on proposals made by the secretary of the interior, when shucks were only of the market value of from 6 mills to 1½ cents per pound, and those furnished by claimant were only of the latter value, in an action for the price of the shucks delivered, the market value only can be recovered. Id.

11. Where water furnished by a water company for a city was unfit for use and inadequate for protection from fire, the city had a right, after the company had had reasonable time to comply with its contract to supply pure and sufficient water, to treat the contract as terminated, and to invoke the aid of a court of equity to enforce its rescission. Farmers Loan & T. Co. v. Galesburg, 578

12. Ignorance of a fact extrinsic and not essential to a contract, but which, if known, might have influenced the actions of a party to the contract, is not such a mistake as will authorize equitable relief. Cleveland v. Smith, 384

II. VALIDITY; RIGHT TO ENFORCE.

13. A contract fair and honest in itself, and untainted with actual fraud, entered into by a subscriber for stock with other subscribers, to the effect that they will purchase the same and pay to him the amount paid by him, if at a time specified he chooses to sell the same, is not contrary to public policy, and can be enforced against the party to it. Morgan v. Struthers, 183

14. A contract by which defendants, for a valuable consideration, agreed not to sell a certain medicinal preparation within the territory which it was covenanted complainants should occupy exclusively, or sell to others for sale there, or promote such sales, is valid. Fowle v. Park, 67

15. Such a contract relating to a compound involving a secret in its preparation, based upon a valuable consideration, and limited as to the space within which, though unlimited as to the time for which, the restraint is to operate, is reasonable and enforceable. Id.

16. Where one has and transfers property in the secret process of manufacturing an article he has discovered, he and his grantees can claim relief as against breaches of trust in respect to it. Fowle v. Park, 67

17. An agreement between grantor and grantee, made upon the conveyance of property, and which reserves to the grantor the enjoyment of the rents and profits of the property conveyed, to which the creditors of the grantor have a right of immediate appropriation to their debts, and which involves a secret trust for a return to the grantor of property of which such creditors have the immediate right of sale, will not be enforced; but the parties will be left in the position where they have placed themselves, although the grantee refuses to perform his part of the fraudulent agreement with the grantor. Dent v. Ferguson, 242

18. A contract with a broker to purchase for defendant "cotton futures" on a margin, by which the purchase or delivery of actual cotton was never contemplated by either party, but the settlement was to be made between the parties by one party paying to the other the difference between the contract price and the market price of said cotton futures, according to the fluctuations in the market,—is a wagering contract and void. Embrey v. Jemison, 172

19. That a person executed a note given on an illegal consideration, with full knowledge of all the facts, is of no moment. The defense he makes is not allowed for his sake, but to maintain the policy of the law. Id.

20. The original payee cannot maintain an action on a note the consideration of which is money advanced by him upon or in execution of a contract of wager, he being a party to that contract, or having directly participated in the making of it in the name of or on behalf of one of the parties. Id.

21. When a broker is privy to the unlawful design of the parties, and brings them together for the very purpose of entering into an illegal agreement, he is particeps criminis, and cannot recover for services rendered or losses incurred by himself in forwarding the transaction. Id.

22. Wherever two or more persons are engaged in a fraudulent transaction to injure another, neither law nor equity will interfere to relieve either of those persons against the other, from the consequences of his own misconduct. Dent v. Ferguson, 242

23. Where losses have been made in an illegal transaction, a person who lends money to the loser with which to pay the debt can recover the loan, notwithstanding his knowledge of the fact that the money was to be so used. Armstrong v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 747

24. A new contract founded on a new and independent consideration, if fair and lawful, although in relation to property respecting which there had been unlawful or fraudulent transactions between the parties, will be dealt with by the courts on its own merits; and if the new consideration be valid and adequate, it will be enforced. Dent v. Ferguson, 242

25. An obligation will be enforced, though indirectly connected with an illegal transaction, if it is supported by an independent consideration, so that the plaintiff does not require the aid of the illegal transaction to make out his case. Armstrong v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 747

26. If a person conveys his property for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or defrauding his creditors, and for several years acquiesces and concurs in the devices, collusive suits, and impositions upon the court in furtherance of this purpose, without taking a single step to annul said conveyance or to stop such proceedings, a court of equity will not aid him or his heirs to recover the property from the grantee or his heirs after the fraud is accomplished. Dent v. Ferguson, 242

27. A public agent cannot bind his principal under powers that have been taken away, by simply antedating his contracts. Under such circumstances a false date is equivalent to a false signature; and the public, in the absence of any ratification of its own, is no more estopped by the one than it would be by the other. Coler v. Cleburne, 146

III. IMPAIRING OBLIGATION.

28. Before an Act withdrawing lands from sale can be held to impair any vested right of an applicant for purchase, he must have done everything required by law to secure such right. Until then no contract right of the applicant is violated by such legislation. Campbell v. Wade, 240

29. The vested priority of a mortgagee is beyond the power of the mortgagor or the Legislature thereafter to disturb. Toledo, D. & B. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 905

30. A judgment for a tort is not a contract or evidence of a contract, within the meaning of the constitutional provision which forbids a State passing a law impairing the obligation of contracts. Preeland v. Williams, 198

31. The Constitution of West Virginia of 1872, in its provision that the property of a citizen shall not be sold on a judgment for an act done during the late civil war, does not violate the obligation of a contract, where the judgment was founded on a tort committed as an act of public war. Id.

32. The provision in the statute that a railroad company organized thereunder may charge for transportation such reasonable rates as may from time to time be fixed by the corporation or prescribed by law, and a provision that no company shall demand an unreasonable price, do not constitute such a contract with the corporation as to the fixing of rates that the Legislature is deprived of power to regulate those charges. Minneapolis E. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 985

33. Whatever belongs merely to the remedy may be altered according to the will of the State, provided the alteration does not impair the obligation of the contract. Hill v. Merchants Mut. Ins. Co. 994

34. A statute providing that the liability of a stockholder may be enforced by notice and motion in the action in which judgment is rendered against the corporation, giving him an opportunity to make defense, while under the law previously the remedy against him was by suit in equity,—does not violate the obligation of his contract. Id.

35. It is entirely competent for the Legislature to give the creditors of a company a new or additional remedy by which the undertaking of a stockholder to pay his subscription can be enforced in their behalf,—such remedy not increasing the debtor's liability. Id.

COPYRIGHT.

1. Under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4903, a person cannot maintain an action at law or in equity for the infringement of his copyright, unless he has given the statutory notice in the several copies of every edition published by him. Thompson v. Hubbard, 76

2. The purchaser of a copyright must comply with the statute, in the copies of every edition published by him, in order to maintain an action against his vendor for an infringement of the copyright. It is not enough that the vendor has given such notice in the edition he published while it was his copyright. Id.

3. A right of action for infringement of copyright, as well as the copyright itself, and the means of securing such right of action, are only those prescribed by Congress. Id.

I. FRANCHISES; CHARTERS.

1. The granting of a corporate right or privilege rests entirely in the discretion of the State, and, when granted, may be accompanied with such conditions as its Legislature may judge most befitting to its interests and policy. Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 1025

2. Exemption from future general legislation, either by a constitutional provision or by an Act of the Legislature, does not exist unless it is given expressly, or unless it follows by an implication equally clear with express words. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, Minn. R. R. & W. Com. 970; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Miller, 267

3. A railroad corporation takes its charter, containing a provision as to rates, subject to the general law of the State and to such changes as may be made in such general law, and subject to future constitutional provisions and future general legislation, in the absence of any prior contract with it exempting it from liability to such future general legislation. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, Minn. R. R. & W. Com. 970

4. The charter of the Minneapolis & Cedar Valley Railroad Company, § 9, giving power to the directors of that company to make rules as to rates of toll, does not constitute an irrevocable contract with that company that it shall have the right for all future time to prescribe its rates of toll, free from all control by the Legislature of the State. Id.

5. The condition is implied in every grant of corporate existence, that the corporation shall be subject to such reasonable regulations, in respect to the general conduct of its affairs, as the Legislature may from time to time prescribe, which do not materially interfere with or obstruct the substantial enjoyment of the privileges the State has granted, and serve only to secure the ends for which the corporation was created. Hill v. Merchants Mut. Ins. Co. 994

II. CONSOLIDATION; REORGANIZATION.

6. Under the Missouri Act of 1870 authorizing the consolidation of two or more railroad companies, the filing with the secretary of state of a resolution accepting the provisions of the Act, passed by a majority vote of the stockholders of each consolidating company, is a matter between the State and the corporation. The State may enforce the forfeiture if the consolidation is void for failure to file such acceptance, but a private person cannot. Leavenworth County v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 1064

7. A certified copy from the secretary of state's office of an agreement for consolidation is conclusive evidence of the consummation of the consolidation of corporations in Missouri, in suits between the consolidated company and individuals or other corporations. Id.

8. Where a charter of a corporation expires, a majority of the stockholders, proposing to form a new company, have no right, as against a minority, to make an arbitrary estimate of the property of the corporation to be transferred to the new company, and to require the minority to go into the new company, or receive for their interest in the property of the old company a sum fixed by those who are buying them out. Mason v. Peubac Min. Co. 524

III. POWERS AND LIABILITIES.

9. Where a corporation is incompetent by its charter to take title to real estate, a conveyance to it is not void, but only voidable, and the sovereign alone can object. It is valid until assailed in a direct proceeding instituted for that purpose. Fritts v. Palmer, 817

10. A conveyance of Colorado real property to a Missouri corporation is not void because it has not complied with the requirements of the Colorado Constitution and laws, that a corporation cannot do business in that State without a place of business and an agent in the State, or without filing a certificate designating such place and such agent. Id.

11. A lease made by one railroad corporation to another, neither of which is expressly authorized by law to enter into the lease, is ultra vires and void. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Keokuk & H. B. Co. 157

12. A contract made by a corporation, which is unlawful and void because beyond the scope of its corporate powers, does not, by being carried into execution, become lawful and valid; but the proper remedy of the party aggrieved is by disaffirming the contract and suing to recover, as on a quantum meruit, the value of what the defendant has actually received the benefit of. Id.

13. Where the charter of a railroad corporation, or the general laws applicable to it, manifest the intention of the Legislature, for the purpose of securing a continuous line of transportation of which its road forms part, to confer upon it the power of making contracts with other railroad or steamboat corporations to promote that end, such contracts are not ultra vires. Id.

14. A bridge over a river, the principal purpose and use of which is for the passage of railroad trains, is a railroad, and the bridge company is a railroad company, within the meaning of statutes authorizing a railroad to make contracts with other railroad companies for the purpose of securing a continuous line for transportation. Id.

15. When the president of a corporation executes in its behalf, and within the scope of its charter, a contract which requires the concurrence of the board of directors, and the board, knowing that he has done so, does not dissent within a reasonable time, it will be presumed to have ratified his act. Id.

16. When a contract is made by any agent of a corporation in its behalf and for a purpose authorized by its charter, and the corporation receives the benefit of the contract without objection, it may be presumed to have authorized or ratified the contract of its agent. Id.

17. Where one railroad company leased and surrendered all its property to another railroad company for the purpose of procuring money to pay liens thereon, and the lessee covenanted in effect to pay and discharge all judgment liens founded on existing claims, and to return the demised property to the lessor at the end of the lease, and the lessee also received proceeds of the bonds secured by a trust deed on the property, the owner of judgments against the lessor is entitled to a decree requiring the lessee to pay the amount of such judgments. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Chicago Third Nat. Bank, 900

IV. STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS.

18. Where by general law a lien is given to a corporation upon its stock for the indebtedness of the stockholder, it is valid and enforceable against all the world. Hammond v. Hastings, 960

19. The lien of a corporation on its stock may be waived, but mere ignorance on the part of the purchaser of the fact of the existence of the lien does not destroy it. It constitutes no waiver on the part of the corporation. Id.

20. It is unnecessary to enter upon the certificate of stock any statement of the limitations and burdens which the law casts upon all such paper; and the omission to state such limitations upon the face of the paper is not a waiver by the corporation of the benefits thereof. Id.

21. Wherever paper of a nature similar to corporate stock is issued, under authority granted by general statute, whoever deals with that paper is charged with notice of all limitations and burdens attached to it by such statute, whether the party lives in or out of the State. Id.

22. A corporation has no legal capacity to release an original subscriber to its capital stock from payment of it, in whole or in any part. Morgan v. Struthers, 132

23. A subscriber to stock of a corporation has a right to make any arrangement for the security of his shares, provided he does not lessen the amount of his subscription, which constitutes part of the trust fund in which all the subscribers have an equal interest. Id.

24. As against the receiver of an insolvent corporation, the owner of preferred stock, who, as director and general agent of the corporation, was active in passing the resolution authorizing the issue of the stock and inducing others to take it, and who has voluntarily subscribed and paid for it and received his certificate therefor, cannot, after holding it over two years and voting on it, recover back the money paid by him for it from the effects of the insolvent corporation on the ground that the corporation had no power to issue preferred stock. Banigan v. Bard, 982

25. In a joint-stock corporation, each stockholder, whether by purchase or original subscription, has the right, unless restrained by the charter or articles of association, to sell and transfer his shares, and, by transferring them, introduce others in his stead. Morgan v. Struthers, 132

26. A married woman has the legal capacity to receive a transfer of stock in moneyed corporations, though the consideration may have proceeded wholly from the husband. Keyser v. Hitz, 531

27. Those holding a majority of the stock cannot place a value upon it at which a dissenting minority must sell, or do something else which they think against their interest, any more than those holding a minority of the stock can do it. Mason v. Pewabic Min. Co. 524

28. The provision in a company's charter, that "the balance due on each share shall be subject to the call of the directors," does not give a stockholder the right, as between himself and the company, or as between him and the company's creditors, to withhold payment of the balance due from him until the necessities of the company require payment in full for the shares subscribed. Hill v. Merchants Mut. Ins. Co. 994

29. Where shares of capital stock are voted to a director as a bonus, he is subject to the liabilities of a shareholder who has taken stock but has not paid for the same, although there is a contract between him and the company that such stock shall not be assessable. Washburn v. Green, 516

30. A stockholder is so far an integral part of the corporation that, in view of the law, he is privy to proceedings touching the body of which he is a member. Hawkins v. Glenn, 184

31. When stock is subscribed to be paid upon call of the company, and the company refuses or neglects to make the call, a court of equity may itself make the call, if the interests of the creditors require it. Id.

32. When a creditor has exhausted his legal remedies against a corporation which fails to make an assessment, he may, by bill in equity or other appropriate means, subject such subscriptions to the satisfaction of his judgment. Id.

33. By the Code of Virginia of 1860, a person in whose name shares of stock stand on the books of the company shall be deemed the owner thereof as it regards the company; and if the money which any stockholder has to pay upon his shares be not paid as required, the same, with interest thereon from the date of the call, may be recovered. Id.

34. A certificate of stock is not negotiable either in form or character; and whoever takes it does so subject to its equities and burdens like every non-negotiable paper; and, though ignorant of such equities and burdens, his ignorance does not relieve the paper therefrom, or enable him to hold it discharged therefrom. Hammond v. Hastings, 960

V. DISSOLUTION; RIGHTS OF CREDITORS.

35. Where a corporation becomes insolvent, its capital stock is a trust fund for the payment of its debts; and if not paid in full, a court of equity can require it to be paid up. Washburn v. Green, 516

36. A suit against an insolvent corporation to subject its property to the payment of its debts, and to remove a lien on it created by a trust deed and chattel mortgage, is one within the Act of March 8, 1875, authorizing an order to bring in an absent defendant in a suit to remove a lien, etc., upon property within the jurisdiction. Mellen v. Moline Malleable Iron Works, 178

37. When a corporation becomes insolvent, it is so far civilly dead that its property may be administered as a trust fund for the benefit of its stockholders and creditors. Id.

38. Where directors of a corporation conduct its business after its dissolution without any attempt to wind it up, and assess its stock, and collect the assessments, they must, in a proceeding to wind up the affairs of the corporation, to pay its debts, and to realize its assets and distribute them among its shareholders, account for the proceeds of the business done since its dissolution. Mason v. Pewabic Min. Co. 524

39. The rights of the stockholders in regard to the assets of an expiring corporation are, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, to have the property converted into money and its value ascertained by a sale, even though a sale is not necessary to the payment of debts. Id.

40. A corporation in debt cannot transfer its entire property by lease, so as to prevent the application of the property to the satisfaction of its debts. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Chicago Third Nat. Bank, 900

41. The properties of a corporation constitute a trust fund for the payment of its debts; and when there is a misappropriation of the funds of a corporation, equity, on behalf of the creditors of such corporation, will follow the funds so diverted. Id.

COUNTIES.

1. A county is a corporation created by and with such powers as are given to it by the State, and is not within the 11th Amendment of the Federal Constitution, restricting the jurisdiction over suits against States, and may be sued in the United States circuit court. Lincoln County v. Luning, 766

2. Nev. Gen. Stat. §§ 1950, 1964-1966, requiring presentation of claims against counties, have application only to unliquidated claims and accounts, and do not apply to bonds and coupons. Id.

3. The debts of a county contracted during a valid organization remain the obligations of the county, although for a time the organization be abandoned and there be no officers to be reached by the process of the courts. Comanche County v. Lewis, 604

4. Ample power is delegated by the Constitution of Kansas to the Legislature of that State to organize a county in any manner it sees fit, and to validate by recognition any organization already existing, no matter how fraudulent the proceedings therefor have been. Comanche County v. Lewis, 604

5. A county in Missouri authorized by law to levy a tax of 50 cents on every $100 of valuation cannot include as part thereof 20 cents on $100, levied by the township boards for township and bridge purposes, but can be compelled to levy an additional tax of 20 cents on $100, to pay the balance of a judgment on bonds and other county debts pro rata. Macon County Ct. v. United States, Huidekoper, 914

6. Under the Missouri law authorizing a county to subscribe to stock of the Missouri & Mississippi Railroad Company, and issue bonds therefor, and levy a tax of $\frac{1}{16}$ of 1 per cent to pay the same, after applying said tax to the payment of a judgment on interest coupons of said bonds, the balance due on such judgment is a liability of the county to be paid out of its general funds. Id.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. A State has power by statute to provide for the adjudication of titles to real estate within its limits, as against nonresidents who are brought into court only by publication. Arndt v. Griggs, 918

2. A court, in a case that does not involve the private rights of litigants, cannot be required to determine whether or not particular bodies of persons constituted a lawful legislative assembly. Clough v. Curtis, 945

3. The Supreme Court of Idaho Territory has original jurisdiction to issue writs of mandate, review, prohibition, habeas corpus, and all writs necessary to the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. Id.

4. The District Court of the Territory of Idaho has jurisdiction of the offense charged in an indictment for a conspiracy by defendant and others to pervert and obstruct the laws of the Territory by unlawfully procuring themselves to be registered as voters while members of the Mormon Church. Davis v. Beason, 687

II. FEDERAL COURTS.

a. Jurisdiction.

5. A suit cannot properly be dismissed by a circuit court of the United States, as not involving a controversy within the jurisdiction 1128 of the court, unless the facts, when made to appear on the record, create a legal certainty of that conclusion. Deputron v. Young, 923

6. Prior to July 12, 1882, suits might be brought by or against national banks in the circuit courts of the United States in the district where the banks were located, but by the Act of that date the jurisdiction for suits thereafter brought by or against national banks, except suits between them and the United States or its officers and agents, must be the same as the jurisdiction for suits by or against banks not organized under any law of the United States. 22 Stat. 162, 163, chap. 290, § 4. Whittemore v. Amoskeag Nat. Bank, 1003

7. No broader jurisdiction as to the subject matter is given by the Act of March 3, 1887, relating to suits against the United States, to the circuit and district courts than that which is given to the Court of Claims. United States v. Jones, 90; United States v. Drew, 93

8. The question of the true construction of a will depends wholly upon general rules of law and upon the local statutes, and in no degree upon the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States. Giles v. Little, 1062

9. An action on a marshal's bond, against him and his sureties, for wrongful taking of goods of plaintiff under an attachment issued out of the circuit court of the United States, arises under the laws of the United States, and is therefore within the jurisdiction of the circuit court, without any averment of citizenship of the parties. Backrack v. Norton, 377

10. If there are several coplaintiffs in a United States circuit court, each plaintiff must be competent to sue, and if there are several co-defendants, each defendant must be liable to be sued, or the jurisdiction cannot be entertained. Smith v. Lyon, 635

11. Where it appears by the record that the plaintiff is described as a citizen of the State of Nevada, and the defendant as a citizen of the State of California, this is sufficient to give jurisdiction of the parties to the circuit court. Terry v. Sharon, 94

12. Where the plaintiff is a citizen and inhabitant of Nebraska, and the defendant is a citizen and resident of Illinois, the latter may be sued by the former in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska. McCormick Harvest. Mach. Co. v. Walther, 833

13. Where, in an action by a stockholder of a national bank in behalf of himself and such stockholders as might join therein, against the bank and its directors, all the parties are citizens of the District of New Hampshire, and the bank is located therein, the circuit court for that district has no jurisdiction. Whittemore v. Amoskeag Nat. Bank, 1002

14. Under the Act of Congress approved March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 552), as amended by the Act of Aug. 13, 1888 (25 Stat. 433), citizens of different States cannot unite as plaintiffs in a suit in a United States circuit court in a State of which only one of them is a citizen, where jurisdiction depends on citizenship. Smith v. Lyon, 635

15. An enlargement of equitable rights by state statute may be administered by the circuit courts of the United States, as well as by the courts of the State. Gormley v. Clark, 909

16. Under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1867, § 1 (24 Stat. 552), as corrected by the Act of Aug. 13, 1888 (25 Stat. 483), to amend the Act of March 3, 1875, where the jurisdiction of the circuit court is founded upon any of the causes mentioned in this section, except the citizenship of the parties, suit must be brought in the district of which the defendant is an inhabitant. But where the jurisdiction of such court is founded solely upon the fact that the parties are citizens of different States, the suit may be brought in the district in which either the plaintiff or the defendant resides. McCormick Harvest. Mach. Co. v. Walthers, 838

b. Practice.

See also TRIAL, 2; WITNESSES, 3.

17. Remedies in the courts of the United States are at common law or in equity, according to the essential character of the case, uncontrolled in that particular by the practice of the state courts. Gormley v. Clark, 909

18. As to the sufficiency and scope of pleadings and the form and effect of verdicts in actions at law, the circuit courts of the United States are governed by the practice of the courts of the State in which they are held. Glenn v. Sumner, 801

19. Courts of the United States are independent of any statute or practice prevailing in courts of the State where the trial is had, in regard to motions for a new trial and bills of exceptions. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 809

20. In Indiana, the assignee of part of a contract may sue thereon jointly with his assignor, or may maintain an action alone if no objection is taken by demurrer or answer to the nonjoinder of the assignor. This rule governs the practice and pleadings in actions at law in the federal courts held within that State. Delaware County v. Diebold Safe & Lock Co., 674

21. A federal court can acquire jurisdiction to quiet title by constructive service against nonresident defendants by publication, where the statutes of the State provide for and allow such mode of service in such cases. Arndt v. Griggs, 918

III. CONFLICT OF AUTHORITY; RELATION OF STATE TO FEDERAL.

22. The jurisdiction of a court of the United States, once obtained over property by being brought within its custody, continues until the purpose of the seizure is accomplished, and cannot be impaired or affected by any legislation of the State, or by any proceedings subsequently commenced in a state court. Rio Grande R. Co. v. Vinet, 400

23. When property is seized to satisfy a money judgment of the United States court it is appropriated to pay that judgment, and the court cannot surrender its jurisdiction over the property until it is applied to that judgment, or that judgment is otherwise satisfied. Only the part remaining after such appropriation goes, upon the death of the debtor, into the probate court as his assets. Id.

24. Although the Act under which bonds were issued provides for litigation concerning the same, and names a court of the State in which such litigation can be had, such jurisdiction is not exclusive and does not prevent suit in the circuit court. Lincoln County v. Luning, 766

25. Perjury committed in testifying before a notary public under authority of Congress is an offense against the United States and within the exclusive jurisdiction of its courts, and cannot be punished in the courts of the State. Thomas v. Loney, 949

26. Where the president and cashier of a national bank forged a promissory note, and entered it upon the books of the bank, for the purpose of sustaining false entries in the books and in order to deceive the United States bank examiner, they may be tried and convicted of the forgery of the note in the state court, although the offense of making such false entries is one against the United States, of which its courts have exclusive cognizance. Cross v. North Carolina, 287

27. The same act or series of acts may constitute an offense equally against the United States and the State, subjecting the guilty party to punishment under the laws of each government. Id.

28. The mode which a State may deem fit to adopt in fixing the amount for any year which it will exact for a corporate franchise is not the subject of judicial inquiry in a federal tribunal. Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 1025

IV. RULES OF DECISION; STARE DECISIS.

29. Upon the construction of the Constitution and laws of a State, the Supreme Court of the United States, as a general rule, follows the decisions of her highest court, unless they conflict with or impair the efficacy of some provision of the Federal Constitution, or of a federal statute, or a rule of general commercial law. Gormley v. Clark, 909; Rich v. Mentz, 1074

30. The Supreme Court of the United States follows the construction of a state statute by the highest court of the State, which is a rule of property in that State. Bacon v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co., 128

31. Substantially conclusive effect is given to state decisions upon the construction of state statutes, as affecting title to real estate within the State. Gormley v. Clark, 909

32. The United States Supreme Court must accept as conclusive the construction of the statute of a State by its highest court. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 784

33. The decision of the highest court of a State deciding that a statute of the State is a general law is conclusive on federal courts and all others. Hammond v. Hastings, 960

34. Where the supreme court of a State has held that a statute of the State does not contravene the State Constitution, the United States Supreme Court will follow such decision. Lincoln County v. Luning, 766

35. The United States Supreme Court is bound by the decision of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York as to compliance with the state statute in relation to taxes, form of assessment, and oath of assessors. Palmer v. McMahon, 772

86. In controversies arising under the Statute of Elizabeth against fraudulent conveyances, involving, as they do, the rights of creditors locally and a rule of property, the United States Supreme Court accepts the conclusions of the highest judicial tribunal of the State as controlling. Peters v. Bain, 696

87. Although the decisions of the land department on matters of law are not binding on the courts, yet on questions relating to the public lands they are entitled to great respect. Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 868

88. The principle of stare decisis applies where a party, instead of prosecuting a second appeal, attempts by a bill of review, or by a new bill in the nature of a bill of review, to reach errors apparent upon the face of the record. Kingsbury v. Buckner, 1047

COVENANT. See also ESTOPPEL, 2.

1. The introduction into a deed of an express covenant of warranty has the effect to deny to the purchaser the benefit of the statutory covenant of seisin under the laws of Mexico. Douglass v. Lewis, 58

2. The covenant of warranty, and that of seisin or of right to convey, are not equivalent covenants. Defect of title will sustain an action upon the latter, while disturbance of possession is requisite to recovery upon the former. Id.

CRIMINAL LAW.

1. Only one indictment and conviction of the crime of unlawful cohabitation, under the Act of 1882, can be had for the time preceding the finding of the indictment; the crime is a continuous one, and is but a single crime until prosecuted. Re Nielsen, 118

2. The conviction of a person of the crime of unlawful cohabitation is a bar to his subsequent prosecution for the crime of adultery committed during the same period, where the adultery charged in the second indictment was an incident and a part of the unlawful cohabitation for which he had been convicted. Id.

CUSTODY OF LAW. See COURTS, 22.

CUSTOM AND USAGE. See EVIDENCE, 17.

DAMAGES. See also CONTRACTS, 9, 10.

1. The damage to be recovered must always be the natural and proximate consequence of the act complained of. Those results are proximate which the wrongdoer, from his position, must have contemplated as the probable consequence of his fraud. Smith v. Bolles, 279

2. Mental pain or distress is a proper element in estimating damages for personal injuries. Kennon v. Gilmer, 110

value if the property was as represented to be. Defendant is bound to make good the loss sustained, such as the moneys that plaintiff has paid out, and interest, and any other outlay legitimately attributable to defendant's fraudulent conduct; but this liability does not include the expected fruits of an unrealized speculation. Smith v. Bolles, 279

4. Where a school district purchased a piece of land from a person in possession having a squatter title, with knowledge by it of the issuance of a United States patent therefor, but under the advice of counsel and with the belief that the squatter title was the better title, and erected a school house thereon, in subsequent proceedings to condemn the land as against the holder of the United States patent, who is the true owner, the school district is only obliged to pay such owner the value of the land without the school house, although it was notified before the erection of the school house that it would erect it at its peril. Searl v. School Dist. No. 2, 740

5. The law of Colorado, that "in estimating the value of all property actually taken, the true and actual value thereof at the time of the appraisal shall be awarded," means the value of the owner's real interest. Id.

6. Where a patentee granted no licenses, and had no established license fee, but supplied the demand himself, and was able to do so, an enforced reduction of price is a proper item of damages for infringement, if proved by satisfactory evidence. Boesch v. Graff, 787

7. The payment of a sum in settlement of a claim for an alleged infringement of a patent cannot be taken as a standard to measure the value of the improvements patented, in determining the damages sustained by the owner of the patent in other cases of infringement. Id.

8. Where the evidence did not show that the reduction in prices of patented articles sustained by the plaintiff was solely due to the acts of the defendant, or to what extent it was due to such acts, damages for infringement cannot be awarded on such alleged reduction. Cornely v. Marekwald, 117

9. In an action for infringement of a patent, where there is in the evidence no basis for a computation of the damages, only nominal damages can be given. Id.

10. Those who take a conveyance and go into possession in entire ignorance of any defect in their title, though technically possessors in bad faith because, by proper inquiry, they might have discovered the defect, are not to be placed on the same level with knavish and fraudulent possessors who, without any title, pertinaciously keep the true and known owner out of possession. New Orleans v. Christmas, 99

11. The rule that a possessor in bad faith is bound to respond for all that the property possessed can be made to produce does not require him to change the state of the property,—as, to change wild land to cultivated. Id.

12. By the law of Louisiana a person evicted from property conveyed to him with warranty may recover from his warrantor, not only the price, but also the rents and revenues which he is bound to respond for to the true owner. Id.

DEDICATION--DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

13. The claims of Mrs. Gaines against the city of New Orleans are sustained for the rents and revenues of improved property while in the hands of the grantees of the city, said property having been recovered by her from said grantees; but her claims for rents and revenues of unimproved lands are disallowed, no rents or revenues having been actually derived from them. Id.

DEDICATION.

1. Mere knowledge and nonaction or failure to assert one's rights are not conclusive evidence of dedication, for they may be rebutted; and the party is always allowed to show facts and circumstances to overcome such presumption. McKey v. Hyde Park, 860

2. In Illinois, a dedication of a street or highway may be inferred from a long and uninterrupted user by the public, with the knowledge and consent of the owner. Id.

DEED.

1. The words of a deed are to be taken most strongly against the party using them; but statutes relating thereto, in derogation of common law, are to be construed strictly. Douglas v. Lewis, 58

2. Where a plat is referred to in a deed as containing a description of land, the courses, distances, and other particulars appearing upon the plat are to be as much regarded, in ascertaining the true description of the land and the intent of the parties, as if they had been expressly enumerated in the deed. Jef-feries v. East Omaha Land Co. 872

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS.

1. By U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1675, as amended by the Act of March 3, 1875, an envoy extraordinary and a minister plenipotentiary to Turkey is entitled to $10,000 a year, unless such salary is otherwise specially provided for. Wallace v. United States, 571

2. The President having raised the grade of the legation to Turkey to a plenipotentiary mission by his appointment of claimant to such office in 1882, and Congress having, before the appointment, provided for the office an annual salary of $7,500, claimant can have no larger salary, and cannot recover the difference between that sum and the sum of $10,000 provided by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1675. Id.

3. The consul of the United States at Hong Kong, in examining Chinese emigrants going to the United States on foreign vessels, does not perform a service required by law or by the regulations, or any service specified in any tariff of fees, or any official service. The fees received for such service, being paid voluntarily to the consul by the person to whom it was rendered, became the private property of the consul, and not the money of the United States, although the consul attached his seal as evidence of his official character. United States v. Mosby, 625

4. Certifying extra copies of quadruplicate invoices of goods shipped to the United States before the Regulations of 1881 is official service which can be performed only under the hand of the consul and his seal of office to the certificate; and the emolument therefor is an official fee. Id.

5. Fees received for certificates of shipment of merchandise in transit through the United States to other countries, where the law did not require the consul to issue those certificates, belong to the consul, and not to the United States. Id.

6. Fees collected for recording which did not relate to official instruments or to official acts, but private transactions for individuals, not requiring the use of the consul's title or seal of office, belong to the consul individually; so also the fees for cattle-disease certificates. Id.

7. Interest on public moneys deposited, in respect to which the consul was a trustee, belonged to the United States. He was not required to put the sums out at interest, but, if he did so, the accretion belonged to the government. Id.

8. Certifying, by a consul, the official character and signature of a notary public, was not an official service, and the fees therefor were his individually. Id.

9. A fee in the settlement of a private estate belongs to the consul individually. Id.

10. Fees collected by a consul at Hong Kong for shipping and discharging seamen on foreign-built vessels sailing on the China coast, under the United States flag, belong to the consul individually where the seamen were not American citizens and the vessel did not clear from a port of the United States. Id.

11. Fees for certifying invoices by a consul for free goods imported into the United States concern an official duty, and do not belong to such consul, but to the government. Id.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

1. The discretionary fee that may be allowed to a district attorney for securing a conviction in a case of indictment for a crime tried by a jury is none the less incident to the trial and judgment because its allowance is contingent upon a conviction. United States v. Waters, 594

2. In allowing the counsel fee to the district attorney the court acts in its judicial capacity; and such allowance, being a judicial act of a court of competent jurisdiction, is not subject to the re-examination and reversal of the attorney-general. United States v. Waters, 594

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—DUTIES.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

1. The District of Columbia is a municipal corporation, having a right to sue and be sued, and is subject to the ordinary rules that govern the law of procedure between private persons. Metropolitan R. Co. v. Dist. of Columbia, 281

2. The District of Columbia is a "State of the Union," within the meaning of the treaty of 1858 between the United States and France, relieving Frenchmen from the disability of alienage in disposing of and inheriting property. De Geofroy v. Riggs, 642

DOMICIL.

A traveling salesman residing in St. Louis, Missouri, who sent his wife and children to Brooklyn, New York, where they took up their residence and commenced to keep house and have since resided, did not become a resident of New York, within the meaning of the Statute of Limitations, until he joined his family there and changed his actual residence to that State, although his domicile might have been there. Penfield v. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. 940

DUE PROCESS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 6-18; TRIAL, 17.

DURESS.

1. Where there is actual or threatened exercise of power possessed over the property of another by the party exacting or receiving payment, there is coercion or duress which will render a payment involuntary. Cleveland v. Smith, 884

2. Virtual or moral duress is sufficient to prevent a payment made under its influence from being voluntary. Robertson v. Frank Brothers Co. 286

3. When moral duress not justified by law is exerted under circumstances sufficient to influence the apprehensions and conduct of a prudent business man, payment of money wrongfully induced thereby ought not to be regarded as voluntary. Id.

4. When duress has been exerted by one clothed with official authority or exercising a public employment, less evidence of compulsion or pressure is required; as, where an officer exacts illegal fees, or a common carrier excessive charges. Id.

5. The payment of money to an official to avoid an onerous penalty, though the imposition of the penalty may be illegal, is sufficient to make the payment an involuntary one; as, where one, in order to get immediate possession of his goods, which are of a perishable nature, pays increased duties illegally exacted. Id.

6. The payment of taxes on lands, where no warrant had been issued, and no proceedings taken, and none could be taken for several months for their collection, without protest or objection, and after readjustment and reduction of the taxes obtained by the company on whose lands they had been assessed, and after a correction therein was made at the request of the company's agent, who wrote to the commissioners that if the correction was made the taxes would be paid,—is not a payment under duress. Little v. Bowers, 1016

DUTIES.

1. The Act of Congress of March 3, 1883, § 7, entitled "An Act to Reduce Internal Revenue Taxation, and for other Purposes," went into effect at the time of the passage of the Act. Robertson v. Bradbury, 405

2. In interpreting customs statutes, commercial terms are to be construed according to the commercial understanding in regard to them. Pickhardt v. Merritt, 358

3. The fact that, at the date of an Act imposing duties, goods of a certain kind had not been manufactured, does not withdraw them from the class to which they belong, when the language of the statute clearly and fairly includes them. It is sufficient if it so includes them according to commercial understanding. Id.

4. When an article is designated by a specific name, and a duty imposed upon it by such name, general terms in a later part of the same Act, although sufficiently broad to comprehend such article, are not applicable to it. Robertson v. Glendinning, 298

5. If goods are damaged, that is matter for appraisement, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2927; but if any portion of them has been actually lost, an allowance for the same must be made to the importer in estimating the duties. Robertson v. Bradbury, 405

6. The levy of duties on a valuation which includes charges of transportation from the place of production to the place of shipment, and charges of shipment, since the passage of the Act of 1883, is contrary to law. Id.

7. Although the valuation of merchandise made by the appraiser is generally conclusive, yet if the appraiser proceed upon a wrong principle, contrary to law, his appraisement is impeachable and open to examination. Robertson v. Frank Brothers Co. 236

8. The duty upon embroidered linen handkerchiefs, under the Act of 1883, is 35 per cent ad valorem. Robertson v. Glendinning, 298

9. A certain rate of duty is designated by U. S. Rev. Stat. tit. 33, § 2502, schedule J, ¶ 8, as enacted by the Act of 1883, § 6, upon handkerchiefs, of linen by name, and they are therefore liable to the duty prescribed by that paragraph, and do not come under ¶ 11 of the same schedule, which fixes a duty upon linen embroideries of 80 per cent ad valorem. Id.

10. Ribbons composed of silk and cotton, in which silk is the component part of chief value, used exclusively as trimmings for ornamenting hats and bonnets, and which have a commercial value only for that purpose, are liable to a duty of only 20 per cent ad valorem, under U. S. Rev. Stat. tit. 33, § 2502, schedule N, "Sundries" (22 Stat. 511), as enacted by the Act of March 3, 1883. Robertson v. Edelhoff, 477

11. Professional productions of a statuary or a sculptor, as those words are used in the statute in relation to duties on imports, embrace

such works of art as are the result of the artist's own creation, or are copies of them, made under his direction and supervision, or copies of works of other artists, made under like direction and supervision, as distinguished from the productions of the manufacturer or mechanic. Merritt v. Tiffany, 299

12. Bronze statues and statuettes are not necessarily statutory, subject only to a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem; but if they are the production of a manufacturer or mechanic they come under the designation of "manufactures of copper," subject to a duty of 45 per cent ad valorem. Id.

13. Ivory pieces for the keys of pianos or organs are manufactures of ivory, and are not dutiable as musical instruments. Robertson v. Gerdan, 408

14. Iron show cards are liable to a duty of 45 per cent ad valorem, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2502, schedule C, last paragraph, as manufactures of iron not specially enumerated in the Act of March 3, 1888. They are not dutiable as printed matter, under schedule M of that Act. Forbes Lithograph Mfg. Co. v. Worthington, 458

15. Iron and steel wire hairpins are liable to a duty of 45 per cent ad valorem under that part of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2502, schedule C, as enacted by the Act of March 3, 1888 (22 Stat. 501). Robertson v. Rosenthal, 392

16. Where the jury finds that the plaintiff was compelled to pay illegal duties in order to get possession of his goods, the payment was not voluntary. Robertson v. Bradbury, 405

17. If the value of the goods expressed in the invoice included charges of transportation and shipment, and the importer desired to have the invoice corrected, and he was told by the officers that he must enter the goods at the value expressed in the invoice, and was compelled to do that in order to proceed at all, then he was not bound to ask for an appraisement, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2926, in order to recover for the excess of duties paid. Id.

18. Judgment in favor of plaintiffs for duties illegally exacted by the collector of the port of New York,—affirmed by a divided court. Miller v. Richard, 212

EJECTMENT.

1. Plaintiff in ejectment must recover on the legal title, and cannot recover, in the courts of the United States, upon the equitable title evinced by his certificates of purchase made by the register of the land office; and he therefore cannot commence the action until the making of the patent for the land. Redfield v. Parks, 327

2. A finding that plaintiff obtained title to the land by patent from the United States to his grantor, who conveyed to plaintiff, makes out his title; and to prevent his recovery defendant must prove some affirmative defense alleged. Deputron v. Young, 928

ELECTION.

The doctrine of election means that where two inconsistent rights are presented to the choice of a party, by a person who manifests a clear intention that he should not enjoy both, he must accept or reject one or the other; and so one cannot take a benefit under an instrument and then repudiate it. Peters v. Bain, 696

EMINENT DOMAIN. See also DAMAGES, 4, 5; IMPROVEMENTS, 3.

1. The right of eminent domain cannot be exercised except upon condition that just compensation shall be made to the owner; and it is the duty of the State to see that the compensation is just, not merely to the individual whose property is taken, but to the public which is to pay for it. Searl v. School Dist. No. 2, 740

2. Pa. Const. 1878, art. 16, § 8, which provides that corporations taking private property for public use shall make compensation for property taken, injured, or destroyed, includes then existing corporations. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Miller, 287

EQUITY. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 11; EJECTMENT, 2.

1. A bill in equity may be retained for the purpose of granting full relief when jurisdiction exists. Gormley v. Clark, 909

2. Where equity can alone afford the entire relief sought, the fact that legal questions are also involved cannot oust the court of jurisdiction. Id.

3. A court of equity which denies legal remedies may enforce equitable remedies for the same debt; and an application for the latter is not foreign to a bill for the former. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Chicago Third Nat. Bank, 900

4. If the objection of want of jurisdiction in equity is not taken in proper time,—namely, before the defendant enters into his defense a large,—the court, having the general jurisdiction, will exercise it. Brown v. Lake Superior Iron Co. 1021

5. The court, for its own protection, may prevent matters purely cognizable at law from being drawn into chancery at the pleasure of the parties interested. Brown v. Lake Superior Iron Co. 1021

6. Where, in a court of equity, an apparent legal burden on property is challenged, the court has jurisdiction of a cross-bill to enforce, by its own procedure, such burden. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Chicago Third Nat. Bank, 900

7. Whether the condition of property was such as to require, for the protection of the parties, that it be sold, was a matter for the court, in its discretion, to determine. If the circumstances justified immediate action, the court had power to order a sale in advance of a final decree. Mellen v. Moline Malleable Iron Works, 178

8. A court of equity does not interfere with judgments at law, unless the complainant has an equitable defense of which he could not avail himself at law, or had a good defense at law which he was prevented from availing himself of by fraud or accident, unmixed with negligence of himself or his agents. Knox County v. Harshman, 586

ESTOPPEL. See also ELECTIONS; INSOLVENCY AND ASSIGNMENT FOR CREDITORS, 17; WATER COMPANIES, 2.

1. If a power to convey is general and a conveyance is a fraud upon the power, no estoppel arises in favor of the grantee unless he paid value without notice. Deputron v. Young, 928

2. In Texas, the clause in a deed, "To have and to hold to the grantee, his heirs and assigns forever, free from the just claim or claims of any and all persons whomsoever claiming or to claim the same,"—is a general warranty, and carries to the grantee, by estoppel, a subsequent title which comes by inheritance to the grantor. Miller v. Texas & P. R. Co. 487

3. One who has accepted the benefit of a conveyance cannot repudiate the burden imposed upon him by express agreement therein. Keller v. Ashford, 667

4. If checks for dividends were indorsed by a woman, she is estopped to say that she did not know their contents and was not the owner of the shares of stock upon which the dividends were declared, where each check is payable to her order, and is on its face for dividends on stock standing in her name on the books of the bank. Keyser v. Hitz, 531

5. The objection that the transfer by a company of its entire property to a new company was illegal and ultra vires, and therefore to be disregarded, cannot be availed of by one who has proceeded against the new company and obtained, upon the assumed validity of such transfer, a decree that it pay his judgment, which is founded upon a demand that company agreed to assume as part of the consideration of the transfer. Fogg v. Blair, 721

6. Where a bank represents to another bank that a holder of a draft is a bona fide holder, and the latter bank takes the draft on deposit, and places it to the holder's credit, and pays his checks, relying on such representation, the former bank is estopped from showing that such holder was not a bona fide holder of the draft; and its receiver stands in no better position. Armstrong v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 747

7. If attaching creditors recognized and dealt with a firm as a limited partnership, they are estopped from insisting that there was no such partnership or that the notice was insufficient. Tracy v. Tuffy, 879

8. A debtor, to destroy equality and accomplish partiality, cannot ignore its long acquiescence and plead an unsubstantial technicality to overthrow protracted, extensive, and costly proceedings carried on in reliance upon its consent. Brown v. Lake Superior Iron Co. 1021

9. Where the mortgagor neither paid nor offered to pay the installments as they became due, nor did he pay or offer to pay them by giving his note secured by mortgage on other real estate at any time thereafter, but, on the contrary, stood by and allowed the property to be sold, saw the sheriff's deed executed for it; and never attempted to redeem, he cannot, thirteen years after the purchaser at the sale has taken possession of it, and after the property has increased in value, regain possession of it by a suit in ejectment, and thus defeat the title acquired at the mortgage sale, by setting up an irregularity in the foreclosure proceedings. Bacon v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 128

I. JUDICIAL NOTICE.

1. Courts must take judicial notice of a charter when declared by the Legislature to be a public Act. Case v. Kelly, 513

2. The United States Supreme Court takes judicial notice of the fact that at the date of his certificate a deputy comptroller of the currency was such officer. Keyser v. Hitz, 531

II. PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

3. If the validity of a deed depends on an act in pais, the party claiming under it is bound to prove the performance of the act. Deputron v. Young, 928

4. The presumption that public officers have done their duty is not a substitute for proof of an independent and material fact. United States v. Carr, 483

5. If a deputy comptroller signs as acting comptroller, it will be assumed that at the date of his certificate he was authorized to exercise the powers and discharge the duties of the comptroller, and was at the time acting comptroller. Keyser v. Hitz, 531

6. In order to establish an acquiescence equivalent to assent in a certain mode of dealing with the subject matter of a mail contract, the burden is on the contractors to show knowledge or information, by the department, of his conduct in the premises. United States v. Carr, 483

7. Where one of a firm to which choses in action were assigned testified that he knew at the time of the transaction that the assignor was insolvent, and that he received them all or nearly all in payment of the debt of his firm, the burden of proof was upon the firm to show the fairness of the transaction, although in their answer as defendants they denied having any property of the debtor. Klein v. Hoffheimer, 373

8. The court never presumes fraud. Carelessness in the dealings between husband and wife does not tend to establish fraud. Schreyer v. Scott, 955

9. The mere possession of it by the husband is no proof that the title to property has passed from the wife to him. After it has been shown that the property accrued to the wife by descent from her father's and brother's estates, the presumption necessarily is that it continued

10. Copies of records, books, or papers, in the general land office, authenticated by the seal and certified by the commissioner thereof, are evidence equally with the original thereof. Culver v. Uthe, 776

11. The original of a deed need not be produced, nor its execution proved, where it has been fully recorded; and where not produced upon notice, the recorder's copy is competent and sufficient evidence. Keller v. Ashford, 667

12. By the law of Illinois, a tax deed is no more than prima facie evidence in favor of the purchaser, and may be shown to be invalid, by proof either that there was no advertisement of sale, no judgment or precept, no taxes unpaid, or no notice to redeem given or recorded. Gage v. Kaufman, 725

13. A complaint in one suit, not under oath or signed by the plaintiff, but only by its attorneys, is incompetent in another suit to prove an admission by the plaintiff. Delaware County v. Diebold Safe & Lock Co. 674

14. A sworn answer in an equity suit, which is responsive to the bill, is evidence for defendant, where plaintiff has not waived an answer under oath. Dravo v. Fabel, 421

15. In an action for the infringement of a reissued patent, in which the complaint alleges that the reissued patent is for the same invention as the original patent, and the answer denies such allegation, it is error for the court, on the trial, to exclude the original patent as evidence. Oregon Imp. Co. v. Excelsior Coal Co. 844

16. Letters of counsel and the letters of one of the commissioners are not competent evidence to show what claims were allowed by the judgment of a commission. Burthe v. Denis, 768

IV. PAROL AND EXTRINSIC CONCERNING WRITINGS.

17. A written and express contract cannot be controlled or varied or contradicted by a usage or custom. De Witt v. Berry, 896

18. When parties have put their engagement into writing, in such terms as import a legal obligation, without any uncertainty, it is conclusively presumed that the whole engagement was reduced to writing; and all oral testimony of a previous conversation between the parties is inadmissible. Id.

19. Where a contract of sale of goods is in writing and contains no warranty, or where a written contract contains a warranty, parol evidence is not admissible to add a warranty. Id.

20. Where a judgment is ambiguous or uncertain as to what, or what portion of, claims were allowed by it, extrinsic evidence is admissible to ascertain and determine those facts. Burthe v. Denis, 768

21. Parol evidence is admissible to show a neglect to make payment on demand, in order to prove that the consideration of a written instrument has not been performed by payment of certain debts to third persons. Mills v. Allen, 717

22. In Massachusetts a recital in a deed, acknowledging payment of the consideration stated, is only prima facie proof, and is subject to be controlled or rebutted by other evidence. Id.

23. Evidence of a promise, as part of the consideration of an instrument to pay debts due from the promisee to third persons, is competent. Id.

24. Where a policy is issued on property "held in trust," parol evidence is admissible to show who are the owners, or who were intended to be insured thereby. California Ins. Co. v. Union Compress Co. 730

25. Where a devise is, on the face of it, clear and intelligible, but from external circumstances an ambiguity arises as to which of two or more things or persons the testator referred to, it being legally certain that he intended one or the other, evidence of his declarations, of the instructions given for his will, and of other circumstances of the like nature, is admissible to determine his intention. Coulam v. Doull, 596

26. Under the statute of Utah, that when any testator shall omit to provide in his or her will for any of his or her children, or for the issue of any deceased child, unless it shall appear that such omission was intentional, such child, or the issue of such child, shall have the same share in the estate of the testator as if he or she had died intestate, extrinsic evidence is admissible to show that the testator's omission to provide for a child was intentional. Id.

82. Testimony that one of the legatees, about the date of the will, had knowledge of its provisions, is not competent upon the trial of the issue as to competency to make a will. Ormsby v. Webb, 805

83. Evidence that the decedent received the bulk of his estate by breaking the will of his grandfather is immaterial upon the issue as to whether the paper in question was or was not valid as his last will and testament. Id.

84. What the plaintiff paid for stock is proper to be proved to establish what loss he has sustained. Smith v. Bolles, 279

85. If a party seeks to make out that certain words used in a contract have a different acceptance from their ordinary sense, he must prove it by clear, distinct, and irresistible evidence. De Witt v. Berry, 896

86. Very clear and direct testimony is essential to support an adjudication that a transfer of property is fraudulent and void as against a subsequent creditor. Schreyer v. Scott, 955

87. Clear, convincing, and unambiguous proofs of fraud are required to set aside a patent; proofs which only create a suspicion do not bring the assurance of certain wrong. United States v. Hancock, 601

88. Where a bill alleges that a decree was obtained by fraud and collusion, and the pleas and answers, under oath, deny the fraud and collusion charged, and aver a purchase of property in good faith, for valuable consideration and without knowledge or notice of any fraud in obtaining the decree, these averments, being responsive to the allegations of the bill, are conclusive in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff's claim, no proofs having been taken. Beals v. Illinois, M. & T. R. Co. 608

EXECUTION.

1. The purchase by a director at sheriff's sale, of bonds delivered by him to the sheriff as the property of the company, although they had in fact never been delivered by the company so as to take effect, vests in him no title. Washburn v. Green, 516

2. A purchaser on execution sale can move for confirmation or to set the sale aside, and can appeal from the order thereon, and may be compelled to perform his bid, and is concluded by the result of proceedings to confirm or annul the same. Deputron v. Young, 923

3. In Nebraska the title of a purchaser at an execution sale depends, not alone upon his bid or payment of the purchase money, but upon the confirmation of the sale; and the sale, though temporarily confirmed, may be set aside, where no rights of a third party accrue in the mean time. Id.

4. Where an order of confirmation was vacated before there was any change in the relation of the parties, a sheriff's deed fell with it. Id.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS. See also COURTS, 23.

1. Every administrator after the first is an administrator de bonis non in fact, and it is not 1186 important that it should so appear of record. Veach v. Rice, 163

2. Under the provisions of the Georgia Code, where there is more than one administrator and one resigns, he who resigns must account to his coadministrator as his successor, who would in effect in such case be an administrator de bonis non; and such accounting is required before discharge. Id.

3. Where a resigning administrator proceeded in conformity with the statute in such case made and provided, and, under the orders of the court of ordinary, ceased to be administrator and was discharged from further liability as such, and a new bond was given by his successor, the sureties who had signed the first bond of the two administrators were also discharged. Id.

4. The judgment of discharge of an administrator, made by the court of ordinary, operates as a discharge from all liability on the part of the administrator, unless the same be impeached in that court for irregularity, or in the superior court for fraud. Id.

5. Property of a debtor, brought within the custody of the circuit court of the United States by seizure under process issued upon its judgment, remains in its custody, to be applied in satisfaction of the judgment, notwithstanding the subsequent death of the debtor. By such death it does not pass under the control of the probate court of the State, to be disposed of in the administration of the assets of the deceased. Rio Grande R. Co. v. Vinet, 400

EX POST FACTO LAWS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3-5.

FEDERAL QUESTION. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 19.

FORFEITURE. See INTERNAL REVENUE, 4-11; POSTOFFICE, 4.

FORGERY. See also COURTS, 26.

1. The forging of a promissory note made payable to or at a national bank does not constitute the offense described in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5418, and is not, within the meaning of that section, a fraud against the United States. Cross v. North Carolina, 287

2. The crime of forgery against the State should not be excused or obliterated by committing another and distinct crime against the United States. Id.

3. Although forgery may have been committed in order that the instrument forged might become the basis of false entries upon the books of a bank, that circumstance cannot defeat the authority of the State to punish the forgery as in itself a distinct, separate offense committed within its limits and against its laws. Id.

FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES. See also CONTRACTS, 26.

1. Where a director advanced money to redeem bonds of the company from a pledge, charged the money to the company, and received its notes therefor, and then attempted 131, 132, 133, 134 U. S.

GAMING--HABEAS CORPUS.

to levy upon and sell the bonds, and himself become the purchaser thereof at a nominal sum, and thus gain an unconscionable advantage over other bondholders, no allowance should be made to him by way of equitable salvage for the money thus advanced by him. Washburn v. Green, 516

2. Where there is no such relation of trust or confidence between the parties as imposes upon one an obligation to give full information to the other, the latter cannot proceed blindly, omitting all inquiry and examination, and then complain that the other did not volunteer to give the information he had. Cleveland v. Smith, 884

3. Where defendants fraudulently converted notes, and accounts, the property of an insolvent debtor, they are liable to a creditor of the latter, not only for the money collected on such notes and accounts, but for the value of those which remain in their hands, not exceeding the amount of the creditor's debt. Klein v. Hoffheimer, 873

4. In Virginia, provisions in a deed of trust are not sufficient to justify the inference of a fraudulent intent, except where the inference is so absolutely irresistible as to preclude indulgence in any other. Peters v. Bain, 696

5. In order to defeat for fraud a settlement made by a husband upon his wife, it must be intended to defraud existing creditors, or creditors whose rights may and do so supervene. Schreyer v. Scott, 955

6. Even a voluntary conveyance from husband to wife is good as against subsequent creditors, unless executed as a cover for future schemes of fraud. Id.

7. Subsequent unexpected depreciation in the value of real estate, or unexpected reverses in business, do not show fraudulent intent in a conveyance of real estate by a husband to his wife, or fraud in the result. Id.

8. Where one who made a conveyance did not purpose to and did not enter upon any new business, and had at the time an abundance of money to pay all his debts, and afterwards paid them, the conveyance will be free from the imputation of fraud, especially as against a remotely subsequent creditor. Id.

9. Where a conveyance from a husband to his wife was of property of which the wife was the equitable owner, or in which she had a large equitable interest, by reason of her moneys having paid for the same and for a large share of the improvements thereon, the conveyance was not voluntary, but upon good consideration. Id.

10. A person who had knowledge of a conveyance two years before he entered into the contract which is the basis of his claim, cannot say that he was defrauded thereby. Id.

GAMING. See CONTRACTS, 18.

GARNISHMENT.

1. On a bill in the nature of a bill for specific performance or for an equitable garnishment, the court may inquire where is the substantial equity in the case. Young v. Clarendon Trop. 856

2. A creditor of a railroad company who endeavors, by suit in equity, to reach and subject to the payment of his debt the alleged equitable debt of a town to the company by reason of the nondelivery of bonds to the company and their return to the town, may be defeated by the laches of the company in the pursuit of its rights against the town. Id.

HABEAS CORPUS.

1. The writ of habeas corpus cannot be turned into a writ of error. Davis v. Beason, 637

2. In a writ of habeas corpus nothing can be inquired into but the jurisdiction of the court. Wight v. Nicholson, 865

3. The including, in one indictment and sentence, of illegal voting both for a representative in Congress and for presidential electors, does not go to the jurisdiction of the state court, but is at the worst mere error, which cannot be inquired into by writ of habeas corpus. Fitzgerald v. Green, 931

4. Where the district court had jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the person, any irregularities occurring in the mere conduct of the case do not affect the validity of its final order. Its judgment, so far as it involves mere errors, cannot be reviewed on habeas corpus. Re Savin, 150

5. If the court which renders a judgment has not jurisdiction to render it, either because the proceedings or the law under which they are taken are unconstitutional, or for any other reason, the judgment is void and may be questioned collaterally; and a defendant who is imprisoned under and by virtue of it may be discharged from custody on habeas corpus. Re Nielsen, 118

6. A party is entitled to a habeas corpus, not merely where the court is without jurisdiction of the cause, but where it has no constitutional authority or power to condemn the prisoner. Id.

7. A second conviction and punishment of the same crime is an excess of authority on the part of a court, and a habeas corpus may be issued for the discharge of the defendant imprisoned on such conviction. Id.

8. Where a double conviction for the same offense appears anywhere in the record, it is sufficient; as, where it appears on the record in the plea of autrefois convict, which is admitted to be true by a demurrer. Id.

9. The general averment in a petition for habeas corpus, that the petitioner was detained in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States, and that the district court had no jurisdiction to try and sentence him, is an averment of a conclusion of law, and not of facts. Re Cuddy, 154

10. The return must specify the true cause of the detention; and the petitioner or the party imprisoned may deny any of the facts set forth in the return, or may allege any other facts that may be material in the case, so that the facts may be ascertained and the matter disposed of as law and justice require. Id.

11. The application for a writ of habeas corpus must set forth the facts concerning the detention of the party restrained, in whose custody he is detained, and by virtue of what claim of authority, if known. Re Cuddy, 154

12. Where a judgment of the district court of the United States is attacked collaterally, and the record discloses a case of contempt, and does not show one beyond the jurisdiction of the court, it must be presumed that the case is within its jurisdiction to punish; but such presumption may be overcome by the evidence in proceedings for habeas corpus. Id.

13. Where it is neither alleged nor proved that the contempt which the person was adjudged, upon notice and hearing, to have committed, was not committed in the presence of the court, and his misbehavior, if it occurred in its presence, made him liable to fine or imprisonment, it must be held that the want of jurisdiction is not affirmatively shown; consequently, that it does not appear that error was committed in refusing the writ of habeas corpus. Id.

14. Where a statute under which a conviction has been had is held unconstitutional, and it repealed the former statute on the subject, on the discharge of a prisoner convicted under it, on a writ of habeas corpus, he cannot be remanded to the court which condemned him; and the attorney-general of the State should be given prior notice of such discharge. In this case ten days' notice was ordered. Re Medley, 835; Re Savage, 842

15. One who is in custody on a warrant from a justice of the peace for perjury in giving his deposition before a notary public, as a witness in a case of a contested election of a member of Congress, may be discharged on writ of habeas corpus by the United States circuit court. Thomas v. Loney, 949

HIGHWAYS. See also DEDICATION, 2.

1. When a duty to keep streets in repair is enjoined on municipal corporations by a statute, a right of action for damages caused by a neglect to perform such duty arises by the common law. Cleveland v. King, 834

2. Although a city only allows a reasonable part of a street to be used for depositing building materials thereon, and requires the builder to indicate the locality of such materials by proper lights, that does not relieve the city from the duty to prevent the street from being so occupied as to endanger passers-by, or from the damages arising from a breach of such duty. Id.

HUSBAND AND WIFE. See also BANKS AND BANKING, 14; CORPORATIONS, 26.

1. Whenever a husband acquires possession of the separate property of his wife, whether with or without her consent, he must be deemed to hold it in trust for her benefit, in the absence of any direct evidence that she intended to make a gift of it to him. Stickney v. Stickney, 136

2. By the Married Woman's Act of April 10, 1869 (16 Stat. at L. 45, chap. 29), in the District of Columbia, a married woman becomes as absolute owner of her separate property as though she were unmarried, and should have the same protection, through her own evidence, as a feme sole; and she may testify to directions to her husband to invest her moneys in her name. Id.

3. Since the passage of the Married Woman's Act for the District of Columbia, there is no presumption that a married woman intended to give to her husband the moneys she placed in his hands, any more than a gift would be inferred from a third person who in like manner deposited money with him. Id.

ILLICIT DISTILLING. See INTERNAL REVENUE.

IMPROVEMENTS. See also DAMAGES, 4.

1. Where a court of equity decrees that a plaintiff is entitled to land held in trust for it, it may direct that he shall pay the value of improvements placed upon it by the trustee while in his possession. Case v. Kelly, 513

2. Courts of equity, in accord with the principles of the civil law, when their aid is sought by the real owner, compel him to make allowance for permanent improvements made bona fide by a party lawfully in possession under a defective title. But if the entry upon the land is a naked trespass, buildings permanently attached to the soil become the property of the owner of the latter. The trespasser can acquire no rights by his tortious acts. Searl v. School Dist. No. 2, 740

3. That a school district, when it acquired possession of property by purchase of an invalid title, was not entitled to the exercise of the power of eminent domain because the Act making such proceedings lawful had not then been passed, is immaterial in determining its liability to the true owner for improvements made by it. Id.

INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, AND COMPLAINT.

In an indictment, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5487, for embezzling a letter which was intended to be conveyed by mail, the failure to allege that the letter had not been delivered to the person to whom it was directed does not render the conviction void. Wight v. Nicholson, 865

INFANTS. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 52; JUDGMENT, 8, 16, 26.

1. In Illinois a decree against a minor is subject to attack, by an original bill, upon the ground of error apparent upon the record, want of jurisdiction, or fraud. Kingsbury v. Buckner, 1047

2. Where an infant complainant in an original suit is a defendant in a cross-bill, he is in court by his original bill; and process is not required upon the cross-bill, when the matter in respect to which the plaintiff in the cross-bill sought relief was embraced by the original bill. Id.

3. Where an infant is so young as to be incapable of making a selection of a person to represent him, the court will permit any person to institute suit in his behalf, exercising, however, discretion to prevent any abuse of that right. Id.

4. The right to bring a suit for an infant does not depend upon the execution of a bond for costs, although, according to the letter of the statute, the next friend may be required to give such bond. Id.

5. It is not necessary to the jurisdiction of the court that the next friend of an infant should exhibit with the bill evidence of special authority to bring it as next friend. His own affidavit that he is the next friend of the infant is sufficient. Id.

6. The rule that a next friend or guardian ad litem cannot, by admissions or stipulations, surrender the rights of the infant, does not prevent a guardian ad litem or prochein amy from assenting to such arrangements as will facilitate the determination of the case in which the rights of the infant are involved. Id.

7. A consent by the next friend or guardian ad litem that a case be heard in a particular division of the Supreme Court of Illinois did not prejudice the substantial rights of the infant, although, in the absence of consent, the supreme court sitting in one division cannot take cognizance of a case from another division. Id.

8. A statutory provision requiring ten days' notice for the suing out of a commission to take depositions might have been waived by a guardian ad litem or next friend without the imputation upon him of fraud or collusion; nor is fraud and collusion to be imputed to him because he did not, after his appointment, file cross-interrogatories, when cross-interrogatories were filed by another party and were of the most searching character. Id.

9. The mere failure of a guardian ad litem and next friend to apply for a rehearing does not raise any presumption of infidelity to his trust. Id.

INJUNCTION. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 54, 55.

1. In a proper case, the equity courts of one State can restrain persons within their jurisdiction from the prosecution of suits in another. Cole v. Cunningham, 538

2. Where a Massachusetts creditor of an insolvent citizen of that State attached in New York a debt due from a citizen of New York to the insolvent debtor, so as to obtain a preference over other creditors, contrary to the insolvent laws of Massachusetts forbidding preferences, a Massachusetts court can restrain the attachment creditor from the prosecution of such attachment suit, in an action in equity brought by the assignees in insolvency in Massachusetts. Id.

INSOLVENCY AND ASSIGNMENT FOR CREDITORS. See also BANKS AND BANKING, 12; LEVY AND SEIZURE.

1. Under the statute of Texas an assignment is not void because it is made to two assignees, instead of to one, although the statute speaks only of an assignee. Muller v. Norton, 897

2. An assignment of a debtor's property for the benefit of his creditors is not void because the assignee is not a resident or citizen of the State where the assignment is made and the debtor resides, provided he complies with the conditions prescribed by the law. Bachrack v. Norton, 877

3. A resident and citizen of Missouri can lawfully be an assignee, under the laws of Texas in regard to assignments by insolvents for the benefit of their creditors. Id.

4. Permitting a sale by the assignee on credit, under the Texas decisions, does not render an assignment void upon its face. Muller v. Norton, 897

5. A clause in an assignment by an insolvent debtor of his property for the benefit of his creditors, that the assignee shall "convert" the property assigned "into cash as soon and upon the best terms possible for the best interests of the creditors," does not give him authority to sell on credit. Id.

6. As respects fraud in law, where that which is valid in an assignment can be separated from that which is invalid, without defeating the general intent, the maxim, "Void in part, void in toto," does not necessarily apply, and the instrument may be sustained notwithstanding the invalidity of a particular division. Peters v. Bain, 896

7. Fraudulent intent is not a necessary deduction from permission to the creditors in the second class to avail themselves of their claims in bidding on property sold at auction under an assignment. Id.

8. An assignment which includes all the property of the grantors as partners and individually, for the benefit of partnership and individual creditors, should be construed distributively, and the partnership assets be applied to the payment of partnership debts, and the individual assets to individual liabilities. Id.

9. A deed of assignment, under the Texas statute, is not void because the verified schedule annexed to it may embrace a debt that cannot be paid ratably with the claims of other creditors. Tracy v. Tuffy, 879

10. An assignment of a limited partnership, which covers the interest of the special partner in the firm property, need not convey his individual property, which cannot be taken for the debts of the firm. Id.

11. In Texas one partner may make, in good faith, in the name of the firm, an assignment of the partnership property for the benefit of creditors. Id.

12. In Texas a limited partnership, when it is insolvent or contemplates insolvency, may make an assignment of its property for the benefit only of such creditors as will accept their proportional share of the proceeds of the effects assigned, and discharge their claims. Id.

13. That a creditor sought to have an assignment set aside does not deprive it of its rights under it, upon the failure of its attack. Peters v. Bain, 896

14. Foreign creditors as well as domestic are precluded by insolvency proceedings from levying on property which has come into the custody of the insolvency court, although they have not made themselves parties to the proceedings. Geilinger v. Philippi, 614

15. By the laws of Louisiana, when a cessio bonorum has been accepted by the court and the creditors, and a syndic has been appointed and qualified, all the property and rights of property of the insolvent are vested in his creditors represented by the syndic as their trustee, and pass to the creditors by the cession, whether included in his schedule or not. Id.

16. An order of the court in insolvency staying all judicial proceedings against the insolvent and his property, and passing all his assets to the syndic for the creditors, is not confined in its operation to the property specifically named in the schedule; nor does the acceptance by the creditors have that effect. Id.

17. Where property was named in the schedule as belonging to his wife individually and not claimed by the debtor, the action of creditors in signing consents to the insolvent's discharge, under the erroneous belief that this property was not subject to their claims, does not estop them, and they are entitled to share in its proceeds when the mistake is discovered. Id.

18. While nonresident creditors are entitled to come in pari passu with domestic, yet if they do not do so, they cannot participate in the distribution. Id.

INSURANCE.

1. A recovery at law could be had on an accident policy, although the contract of defendant was not to pay any sum absolutely, but only to levy an assessment and pay over the proceeds. United States Mut. Accident Assn. v. Barry, 60

2. Where a policy does not make the payment of any sum contingent on an assessment, or on the collection of an assessment, but it agrees to pay a principal sum represented by the payment of $2 for each member in a certain division, within sixty days after the proof of death, and the number of members is proved to be sufficient to pay the loss if an assessment were made, an action at law may be maintained for the amount of the loss; the remedy is not solely in equity for a specific performance of the contract. Id.

8. In an action on an accident policy the court properly instructed the jury that jumping off a platform was the means by which the injury was caused; that the question was whether there was anything accidental, unforeseen, involuntary, unexpected, in the act of jumping, from the time the deceased left the platform until he alighted on the ground; that the term "accidental" was used in the policy in its ordinary, popular sense, as meaning "happening by chance, unexpectedly taking place, not according to the usual course of things, or not as expected;" that if, in the act that preceded the injury, something unforeseen, unexpected, or unusual occurred which produced the injury, then the injury resulted through accidental means. Id.

4. When the law of the State provides that a person who solicits or procures applications for insurance shall be held to be the agent of the insurance company, and such agent fills up the application, his act in doing so is the act of the company. Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Chamberlain, 841

5. Marine policies issued to the respective owners of cotton are not to have any effect upon a fire policy, unless they amount to double insurance. Double insurance exists only in the case of risks upon the same interest in property and in favor of the same person. California Ins. Co. v. Union Compress Co. 730

6. Common carriers can insure themselves against loss proceeding from the negligence of their own servants. Id.

7. Having issued a policy on cotton, with notice that it was intended to cover the interest of railroad companies, the insurer is estopped from asserting that the policy was intended to protect only the legal owners of the cotton. Id.

8. Railroad companies, by acquiring receipts of a bailee and issuing bills of lading for cotton, take only constructive possession of it; and the actual and physical possession of a warehouse company gives it the right to effect insurance for its own benefit, and, as bailee or agent, for the protection of the railroad companies. Id.

9. A bailor who has an insurable interest in the property can, to the extent of his insurable interest, claim the benefit of insurance effected in his favor by his bailee; and the case is not varied or affected by a clause in receipts given by him, "Not responsible for any loss by fire." Id.

10. The words "held by them in trust," in a policy, cannot properly be limited to a holding in trust merely for an absolute owner, when it clearly appears that railroad companies had an insurable interest in the cotton, and the plaintiff held the property in trust exclusively for those companies. Id.

11. A person may insure in his own name goods held in trust by him, and he can recover for their entire value, holding the excess over his own interest in them for the benefit of those who have intrusted the goods to him. Id.

12. Where a company received cotton to press, and issued receipts therefor, which were exchanged with a railroad company for its bills of lading for the transportation of the cotton, agreeing to deliver it at an address specified in the bill of lading, the railroad company has an insurable interest in the cotton, which may be covered by a policy issued to the former company. Id.

18. Right of action on a policy insuring a carrier is not contingent upon the payment by the carrier of the value of the cotton burned, but it is contingent only upon the destruction of the cotton by fire under circumstances which impose a liability upon the carrier. Id.

14. Where the agent writes in the application that the applicant has no other insurance, although the applicant told him that he had certificates of membership in co-operative companies, which the agent said were not considered insurance by him, the company is bound by the agent's interpretation, and estopped from asserting the contrary. Continental L. Ins. Co. v. Chamberlain, 341

15. If an applicant for insurance fully states the facts to the agent, and the agent writes the answers to the questions contrary to the facts stated by the applicant, the insurance company is estopped from making a defense in an action on the policy, by reason of the falsity of such answers. Id.

16. The words of a policy, "Direct loss or damage by fire," mean loss or damage occurring directly from fire as the destroying agency, in contradistinction to the remoteness of fire as such agency. California Ins. Co. v. Union Compress Co. 780

17. A clause written in the margin of a policy, granting a privilege "to keep not exceeding 5 barrels of oil on said premises," does not dispense with the printed regulations as to precautions in handling or using it. Gunther v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 857

18. Where a policy of fire insurance permits the use of kerosene or like oil "for lights, if the same is drawn and the lamps are filled and trimmed by daylight only," the words "for lights" are restricted in meaning to lighting the insured premises only, and the words "by daylight" are intended to prevent the use of artificial light from which the oil might catch fire. Id.

19. A breach of the conditions of a policy by anyone permitted by the assured to occupy the premises is equivalent to a breach by the assured himself. Id.

20. An assured is chargeable with any acts of his lessee in keeping on the premises any prohibited articles, although they were not intended to be used there, but for lighting other places. Id.

21. Judgments in actions for insurance in favor of plaintiff, for loss by fire of his hotel building,—affirmed by reason of a divided court. Continental Ins. Co. v. Wright, 210

INTEREST.

1. A defendant is not entitled to interest after tender made, if the plaintiff has not, since the tender, realized any interest upon the moneys left by him for defendant at a bank. Cheney v. Libby, 818

2. Interest on a dividend declared by a receiver should be allowed from the time it was declared and ought to have been paid. Armstrong v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 747

3. Interest on bonds should be allowed only from the date when they were delivered to the owners and holders of them. Washburn v. Green, 516

4. Where coupons, as well as the bonds, are silent as to the rate of interest after maturity, and are made payable in New York, the rate of interest established by law in that State is to be allowed on the coupons after their maturity. Scotland County v. Hill, 261

5. Where a judgment was rendered in Missouri, the law of that State governs as to interest on the judgment after its rendition. Id.

6. A guarantor of title to land in Louisiana is not liable, on an eviction of his grantee, for interest on the valuation of unimproved land from which his grantee derived no rents or revenues. New Orleans v. Christmas, 90

7. Under the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, parties may contract in writing for the payment of interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum. Shepherd v. Pepper, 706

INTERNAL REVENUE.

1. One who, in his business of buying and selling stocks for others, regularly employs capital by use of which interest is earned upon moneys advanced by him for his customers, is, under the statute, a banker, whose capital, employed in his business, is liable to a tax of $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent per month, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 8408. Richmond v. Blake, 481

2. One who has a place of business where stocks are received for sale is, by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 8407, a banker. Id.

3. Where one has a room or place indicated by a sign over the door, where his mail matter is received, and where he can be met by his clients, and where they can deliver stocks to be sold by him, and he buys and sells stocks for his customers, stocks, when delivered to him at this place of business for sale, are received by him "for sale," within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 8407. Id.

4. The forfeiture for illicit distilling is consummated immediately upon the commission of the act causing it, and constitutes a statutory transfer, at that time, of the right to the property to the United States; and the judicial condemnation, when obtained, relates back to that time, and avoids all intermediate sales and alienations, even to purchasers in good faith. United States v. Stonell, 555

5. By U. S. Rev. Stat. § 8258, personal property, by whomsoever owned, in the possession of an illicit distiller, or found upon the premises, is forfeited. Id.

6. Butts sold to a third person before any offense was committed, but on the premises at the time of the commission of the offense of illicit distilling, and of the seizure, are forfeited. Id.

7. Malt and hops on the premises at the time of the commission of the offense and of the seizure are forfeited for illicit distilling, although sold to a third person after the offense was committed. Id.

8. Horses, wagons, and harnesses sold after the forfeiture, but found upon the premises at the time of the seizure, were forfeited under the Act of Congress of 1875 relating to illicit distilling. Id.

9. Where illicit distilling was not carried on with the knowledge or permission of a prior mortgagee, the mortgage is valid as against the United States; and the judgment of condemnation must be against the equity of redemption only. Id.

10. The setting up of a still on mortgaged land, with the mortgagor's knowledge and consent, in violation of the internal revenue laws, operated, from the time it was set up, as a statutory conveyance to the United States of the mortgagor's title and interest in the land, which was as valid and effectual as a recorded deed; and the right so vested in the United States could not be defeated or impaired by any subsequent act of the mortgagor. Id.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—JUDGMENT, II.

11. Boiler, engine, pump, vat, and tanks annexed to the land, being real estate and covered by a mortgage, and not used with the distillery, are, as against an innocent prior mortgagee, exempt from condemnation for illicit distilling; only the mortgagor's interest is liable thereto. United States v. Stowell, 555

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

1. That part of the statute of Iowa concerning the sale of liquors which declares that no person shall own or keep, or be in any way concerned, engaged, or employed in owning or keeping, any intoxicating liquors with intent to sell the same within that State, and all the prohibitory clauses of the statute, are within the constitutional powers of the State Legislature. Eilenbecker v. Plymouth County Dist. Ct. 801

2. It is no objection to a statute that it authorizes a proceeding in the nature of a suit in equity to suppress the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, which are by law prohibited, and to abate the nuisance which the statute declares such acts to be. Id.

I. RENDITION; ENTRY; FORM; AMENDMENT.

1. A court cannot adjudicate directly upon a person's right without having him either actually or constructively before it. Gregory v. Stetson, 792

2. Under the statutes of Texas, in a suit against partners, where one of them was a non-resident, and notice was addressed to him under Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 1280, and the other partner was served personally, the judgment is not a personal judgment against the nonresident partner, but a judgment against the partner individually who was personally served, and against the firm as a distinct legal entity. Sugg v. Thornton, 447

3. By the practice in chancery in Illinois, a decree against an infant is absolute in the first instance. Kingsbury v. Buckner, 1047

4. A party is not bound by a prior decree which is so uncertain in describing property as to be inoperative and void. Shepherd v. Pepper, 706

5. Under the statutes of Texas, a party recovering a judgment may remit any part of it; and where the remitter does not appear to have been made in open court, the court may, at the same term and before any writ of error is sued out, correct the record in that particular according to the fact. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Malin, 450

6. A decree pro confesso is not a decree as of course according to the prayer of the bill, or merely such as the complainant chooses to take it; but it should be made by the court, according to what is proper to be decreed upon the 1142 statements of the bill, assumed to be true. Ohio C. R. Co. v. Central Trust Co. 561

7. If the allegations of the bill are distinct and positive, they may be taken as true on a decree pro confesso, without proof; but if they are indefinite, or the demand of the plaintiff is in its nature uncertain, the requisite certainty must be afforded by proof. Id.

8. In suits for the foreclosure of mortgages, a decree pro confesso can be rendered for a balance due over and above the proceeds of the sale, only when the case made by the bill shows that the amount is due. Id.

II. EFFECT AND CONCLUSIVENESS.

9. An adjudication in a state court which binds the plaintiff, whether it was right or wrong, concludes him until it has been reversed or set aside. It cannot be disregarded any more in the courts of the United States than in those of the State. Scotland County v. Hill, 261

10. An adjudication that a particular case is of equitable cognizance cannot be disturbed by an original suit. Such adjudication is not void, even if erroneous. Mellen v. Moline Malleable Iron Works, 178

11. The district court of the United States possesses superior jurisdiction; and its judgments cannot be assailed collaterally, except upon grounds that impeach the jurisdiction. It is presumed to have jurisdiction to give the judgments it renders, until the contrary appears. Re Cuddy, 154

12. The courts of ordinary in Georgia are courts of original, exclusive, and general jurisdiction over decedents' estates; and their judgments are no more open to collateral attack than the judgments, decrees, or orders of any other court. Veach v. Rice, 163

13. Whether a suit to remove a lien on property of an insolvent corporation could be brought before plaintiff had exhausted his legal remedies by judgment and execution was one of the questions necessary to be determined in the suit; and any error in deciding it would not authorize even the same court, in an original, independent suit, to treat the decree as void. Mellen v. Moline Malleable Iron Works, 178

14. Contingent limitations and executory devises to persons not in being may be bound by decree against a person claiming a vested estate of inheritance; but a person in being claiming under an executory devise not subject to any preceding vested estate of inheritance by which it may be defeated must be made a party to a suit affecting his rights. Miller v. Texas & P. R. Co. 487

15. Where a former judgment was rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction, to which a railroad company that issued bonds, and the surviving trustee under the mortgage made to secure the bonds, were made parties, the bondholders, being represented by the trustee, are bound by the decree canceling and annulling the bonds and mortgage, unless the decree was fraudulently obtained. Beals v. Illinois, M. & T. R. Co. 606

16. Where an infant, by his prochein amy, prosecuted an appeal to the Supreme Court of

JUDGMENT, III.—LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Illinois from the original decree rendered in a suit brought by him, and appeared by guardian ad litem to an appeal in the cross-suit, he is as much bound by the action of that court in respect to mere errors of law not involving jurisdiction as if he had been an adult when the appeal was taken. Kingsbury v. Buckner, 1047

17. A decree against a corporation, making an assessment on its stock in the discharge of a duty resting on the corporation, binds its members in the absence of fraud, although it has assigned its property and rights in trust for the payment of its debts and has ceased to exist. Hawkins v. Glenn, 184

18. A stockholder is bound by a decree of a court of equity against the corporation in enforcement of a corporate duty, although not a party as an individual, but only through representation by the company. Id.

19. When the suit in which a judgment was recovered was not commenced until after a bank went into liquidation, the judgment against the corporation is not binding on the stockholders in the sense that it cannot be re-examined, where the facts of the case were not known to the stockholders of the bank when the judgment was rendered. Schrader v. Manufacturers Nat. Bank, 564

III. LIEN; ENFORCEMENT; RELIEF AGAINST.

20. Judgments become liens only from the time they are rendered, or notice thereof is filed in the register's office of the county where the property is situated. They are subordinate to any prior mortgage upon the property. Fogg v. Blair, 721

21. No execution can be issued in one State upon a judgment of another, without a new suit. Cole v. Cunningham, 588

22. The provision of U. S. Const. art. 4, § 1, that full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the judgments of every other State, does not prevent an inquiry into the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment, over the parties and subject matter, nor as to whether the judgment is impeachable for fraud. Id.

23. Where a court has jurisdiction of the case and of the parties and of the subject matter, for any mere error in its decision the proper remedy is by appeal, or by bill of review in the same court, and not by a suit in another court. Leavenworth County v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 1064

24. The facts that some of the trustees in a deed of trust or mortgage given by a railroad company were directors or stockholders in a railroad company which procured the foreclosure of the mortgage, and that one person was the president of both companies, and that a majority of the directors of both companies were the same persons, and that a majority of the stock of the mortgagor company was in the hands of the president of the other company, and that the attorney who appeared for the mortgagor company had previously been employed by the other company, and the attorneys who brought the foreclosure suit were afterwards attorneys of the latter company, and one of the attorneys of that company in the fore-

25. Where the proper place to have made a defense was in a foreclosure suit, and ample opportunity was had there for such defense, the court, in a suit afterwards brought to declare the foreclosure sale void, is not bound to give effect to such defense. Id.

26. If original and cross-bills were not a genuine case, but were contrived and the proceedings were conducted for the purpose of depriving an infant of his estate, without bringing attention to the real merits of his claim to the property in dispute, the decree in such case would not constitute an obstacle in the way of giving relief to the infant. Kingsbury v. Buckner, 1047

27. That the attention of the court was not specially called in a former suit relating to an infant's property to the points now made against the theory of a trust, advanced in behalf of the opposite party, does not show fraud or collusion. The absence from the opinion of that court of any reference to it does not prove that the guardian ad litem and next friend failed to make the point, or that he purposely avoided allusion to it. Id.

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

Insolvency proceedings in Louisiana place all of the debtor's property in gremio legis, and prevent any valid levy on any part of it thereafter, although it is not included in the schedule, and remains in the debtor's possession. Geilinger v. Philippi, 614

LIENS. See also CORPORATIONS, 18, 19; MORTGAGE, 15, 16.

1. A bargain and sale of personal property, accompanied by delivery, divests the vendor of any lien for payment, unless such lien is secured by chattel mortgage or by agreement between the parties. Segrist v. Crabtree, 125

2. The Indiana Act of 1887 gives a lien to employés of a corporation only for work and labor, and not for the value of materials furnished, or for advances of money made. Vane v. Newcombe, 810

3. A contractor with a corporation is not an employé of the corporation, within the meaning of the Indiana Act of 1887, § 1 (Ind. Rev. Stat. § 5286), which gives a lien to employés for work and labor done and performed by them for the corporation. Id.

4. Plaintiff, by perfecting his claim for a lien under the Indiana Act of 1887, waived any right he had to assert his common-law lien on the personal property and earnings of the corporation. Id.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

1. No state statute of limitations can affect the rights of the United States; it is not amenable.

LIS PENDENS; MANDAMUS.

able to the statute of limitations or the doctrine of laches. Redfield v. Parks, 827

2. The District of Columbia is embraced in the terms of the Statute of Limitations in force in that district. Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 231

8. The fact that the duty to pay money for work and materials which defendant failed to perform was a statutory one does not make the action one upon the statute; such an action is one within the Statute of Limitations. Id.

4. In Texas, where the Statute of Limitations has commenced to run against a party, it is not suspended by his death, and the period of limitation cannot be extended by the connection of one disability with another. Miller v. Texas & P. R. Co. 487

5. The provision in the Virginia Statute of Limitations, that the time during which a suit shall be obstructed by a resident of the State removing and remaining out of the State shall not be computed as part of the time within which the suit should be brought, does not apply where the removal from the State occurred before the contract sued upon was made, and, therefore, before any cause of action thereon accrued. Embrey v. Jemison, 172

6. By N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 390, an action which does not involve title or possession of real property in the State cannot be brought in the State against a nonresident, after the time limited by the laws of his residence for bringing a like action, except by a resident of the State or one who becomes so before the expiration of the time so limited. Penfield v. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. 940

7. Unpaid subscriptions to stock are assets, and, the corporation being insolvent, the existence of creditors subjects these liabilities to the rules applicable to funds held in trust; and statutes of limitation do not commence to run in respect to them until after a call and assessment has been made. Hawkins v. Glenn, 184

8. In a case of fraud upon the part of an administrator, in which each of the defendants participated, a court of equity should be slow in denying relief upon the mere ground of laches in bringing suit. Bryan v. Kales, 829

9. In Arizona the limitation for the commencement of an action to recover real property or its possession is five years. An equitable action to set aside deeds and recover real property is not barred by such statute by a delay of four years in suing. Id.

10. In the courts of the United States, in an action of ejectment based on a title derived from the government, the Statute of Limitations does not begin to run until the date of the government patent for the land. Redfield v. Parks, 827

11. Where the Statute of Limitations has begun to run against the right of an assignee in bankruptcy to redeem from a foreclosure sale and conveyance of real property of the bankrupt, the statute continues to run against the subsequent grantee of the same property by conveyance from the assignee. Greene v. Taylor, 411

12. A conveyance by an assignee in bankruptcy cannot prevent the operation of the bar of the statute against the grantee, when it has already run against the assignee, or bring into action a new period of limitation dating from the time of the conveyance; nor can it interrupt the running of the statute against the claim or right, when it has once commenced to run against the assignee. Id.

13. That a bankrupt omitted to mention life policies in his schedules in bankruptcy, and that neither he nor his administrator informed the assignee of them, where they took no means to conceal them, does not establish fraudulent concealment of them so as to prevent the running of the Statute of Limitations. Avery v. Cleary, 469

14. A suit by an assignee in bankruptcy, to recover the proceeds of policies on the life of the bankrupt, received by the defendant claiming under an assignment from the bankrupt, is a suit between the assignee in bankruptcy and one claiming an adverse interest, within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5057; and such suit is therefore barred by the two years limitation provided by such section. Id.; Cleary v. Ellis Foundry Co. 473

15. When payment is provided for out of a particular fund to be created by the act of the debtor, he cannot plead the Statute of Limitations until he shows that that fund has been provided. Lincoln County v. Luning, 766

16. One having a cause of action against a Tennessee corporation, for personal injury in that State, and being a resident of Missouri when the injury occurred, is barred by N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 390, from bringing his action in New York, unless he became a resident of that State before the expiration of the one year limited by the laws of Tennessee for the commencement of such an action, although in New York the period of limitation is three years. Penfield v. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. 940

LIS PENDENS. See also BONDS, 21.

A purchaser pendente lite cannot relitigate, in an original, independent suit, the matters determined in a suit to which his vendor was a party. Mellen v. Moline Malleable Iron Works, 178

MANDAMUS. See also STATE, 6.

1. The writ of mandamus may be issued where an inferior court refuses to take jurisdiction when by law it ought to do so, or where, having obtained jurisdiction, it refuses to proceed in its exercise. Re Parker, 123

2. Although, when the order dismissing an appeal was made, the supreme court of a Territory consisted of other judges than its present members, yet a mandamus can issue to the court constituted as it now is, to reinstate a case dismissed by their predecessors. Id.

3. A proceeding by mandamus to compel the levy of a tax to pay a judgment is in the nature of execution. The rights of the parties to the judgment, in respect of its subject matter, were fixed by its being rendered. Chanute v. Trader, 345

4. A court, by means of writs of mandamus operating upon the officers of legislative bodies, cannot make up the records of the proceedings of those bodies, or cause alterations to be made in such records as prepared by the officer whose duty it was to prepare them. Clough v. Curtis, 945

MARSHAL.

Although the President has authority to regulate the length of service and compensation of a special deputy marshal or a supervisor of election, yet where the services for which compensation is demanded were performed before the President made such regulations, and were performed in pursuance of the statute, compensation must be made therefor accordingly. United States v. Davis, 890

MASTER AND SERVANT.

1. A master is liable to third persons injured by negligent acts done by his servant in the course of his employment, although the master did not authorize or know of the servant's act or neglect, or even if he disapproved of or forbade it. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Rahn, 440

2. Where a person, for certain commissions to be paid him, agrees to give his whole time and services to the business of a company in selling its machines, and the company reserves to itself the right of prescribing and regulating, not only what business he shall do, but the manner in which he shall do it, such person is the company's servant, for whose negligence in the course of his employment the company is responsible. Id.

3. The relation of master and servant exists whenever the employer retains the right to direct the manner in which the business shall be done, as well as the result to be accomplished,—or, in other words, not only what shall be done, but how it shall be done. Id.

4. An employer is exempt from liability for injuries to a servant caused by another servant. Quebec Steamship Co. v. Merchant, 656

5. The employer is liable to the servant for negligence of a fellow servant when the former's own negligence contributes to the injury, or when the other servant occupies such a relation to the injured party, or to his employment in the course of which his injury was received, as to make the negligence of such servant the negligence of the employer. Id.

6. The porter and the carpenter of a steamship are fellow servants with the stewardess of the ship. Id.

7. One employed by a railroad company as a laborer or construction hand cannot recover of the company for injuries received by him through the negligence of his fellow servants in allowing a rail to drop which he and they were loading on a car, whereby his leg and foot were broken and crushed. Coyne v. Union P. R. Co. 651

8. That, after men had lifted a rail which produced an injury to a fellow servant, and had carried it forward to a car, and while there holding it, awaiting the word of command from the boss to lift it further and throw it on the car, the boss failed to give the word of command in such a way as to produce concert of action in the men, but, on the contrary, ordered them to get the rail on the car in any way they could, and that he hurried the men and used oaths, whereby they became confused and failed to act in concert,—does not authorize a recovery from the employer. Id.

9. Where the work of construction and repair of a railroad must be done in the intervals between the running of regular trains, and this fact is known to an employé who is employed to do such work, he assumes the risk of doing it at the times at which it has to be done. Id.

10. A judgment for defendant on a verdict by direction, in an action for death of an employé from negligence,—affirmed by a divided court. Bauer v. Texas & P. R. Co. 209

MINES.

1. Where plaintiff applied for a patent for placer ground, and complied with the law, and no adverse claim was filed by defendant during the period of publication of notice of the application, the latter is precluded from questioning plaintiff's right to the patent, and from objecting to the location or its character as placer ground. Dahl v. Montana Copper Co. 325; Dahl v. Raunheim, 324

2. Where the existence of a vein or lode in a placer claim is not known at the time of the application for a patent, that instrument will convey all valuable mineral and other deposits within its boundaries. Dahl v. Raunheim, 324

3. Where a person has complied with all the proceedings essential for the issue of a patent for placer mining ground, he is the equitable owner of the mining ground, and the government holds the premises in trust for him, to be delivered upon the payments specified. Id.

4. Where, in a contract for the sale of an interest in a mine, it is provided that if the purchaser at any time shall dispose of or sell such interest, then and in that case the unpaid purchase money shall become immediately due and payable, a leasing of the property is a disposal of it so as to render the purchaser immediately liable for the unpaid purchase money, although by the terms of the contract the same had not become otherwise due. Hill v. Sumner, 284

See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 43; CONTRACTS, 29; JUDGMENT, 8, 24; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 11; REAL PROPERTY; TAXES, 21.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Mortgages of railroad property and deeds of trust of the same, which in terms cover after-acquired property, are valid, and estop the company and all persons claiming under it and in privity with it from asserting that they do not cover all the property and rights which

MORTGAGE, II.—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

they profess to cover. Thompson v. White Water Valley R. Co. 256

2. Rails put down upon a railroad, and permanent fixtures which are essential to its successful operation, become a part of the property of the company covered by a mortgage, as much as though they had existed when the mortgage was executed. Id.

8. Where a railroad company issued certain of its bonds under an agreement with the person to whom they were issued that it would issue no more of its bonds, the holder of such bonds has a right of priority in payment from the proceeds of a foreclosure sale of the railroad under the mortgage securing the bonds, over those holders only of other subsequently issued bonds of the company secured by the same mortgage, who took their bonds with actual notice of the agreement. McMurray v. Moran, 814

4. A court of equity, on the application of a junior incumbrancer, will provide for the sale of the entire incumbered property, if the circumstances of the case show that the interests of the mortgagor and of the incumbrancers require the sale. Shepherd v. Pepper, 706

5. Sale of the entire property is proper in the case of deeds of trust, where all the incumbrances are due, and where the plaintiff has a first lien on some of the property sought to be sold and a second lien on the other property, and where all the incumbrancers are parties to the suit. Id.

6. Property omitted by accident from a trust deed, when both parties supposed the deed covered it, may be reached and sold in a foreclosure suit. Id.

7. In a suit to establish a mortgage, and for a sale thereunder, it is competent to unite as defendants both the mortgagor and a party claiming the property adversely to the lien of the mortgage by virtue of proceedings for a sale for taxes had subsequently to its execution. Mendenhall v. Hall, 1012

8. That a mortgagor had only the equitable title to the land does not change the rights of the mortgagee under a mortgage with words of general description, conveying land held by a full equitable, as well as that held by a legal, title. Toledo, D. & B. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 905

9. Where, by the provisions of a mortgage to a trustee, he could proceed to collect the mortgage debt, by litigation or otherwise, only at the request of the holders of a majority of the bonds, and the majority of such holders desired litigation to cease, the trustee was authorized to put an end to it; and his waiver of an appeal binds all who act in his name as trustee. Etwell v. Foadick, 998

10. Defects in a notice of mortgage sale, not sufficient to deceive anyone, will not defeat the title acquired at the sale. Bacon v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 128

11. A condition in a mortgage that if, at the expiration of the time limited for the payment of the installments, there should remain due on the mortgage a named sum, the mortgagor might have the privilege of paying the amount due by giving his note therefor, secured by mortgage on other real estate, does not prevent the installments from falling due at the time stipulated, or prevent a sale under the mortgage to satisfy them when due; but the mortgagor may, in such case, stop the sale by insisting on the terms of the stipulation in the mortgage and complying with the terms thereof. Id.

12. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 808, relating to the District of Columbia, authorizes a decree in personam against a debtor for the balance remaining due after the proceeds of the sale of lands covered by a mortgage or a deed of trust in the nature thereof have been applied to the satisfaction of the debt. Shepherd v. Pepper, 706

13. A mortgage, which, in Louisiana, a wife has by statute on her husband's real estate for her money which came to his hands, though not registered, is not merged in a simulated and fraudulent title conveyed by her husband as dation en paiement. Bradley v. Clafin, 367

II. PRIORITY OF LIEN.

14. Holders of obligations of a railroad company, conferring upon them a lien upon the earnings of a section of the road for its construction by them, have a lien inferior in priority to that of bondholders secured by an earlier mortgage on the road, and to that of purchasers under a foreclosure sale on the mortgage. Thompson v. White Water Valley R. Co. 256

15. A contractor to build a section of a railroad, where the work was not done at the request of the mortgagees, but upon a contract with the lessee of the road, which had stipulated as one of the considerations of the lease to construct that part of the line, has not a lien upon the earnings of the section, on the ground that with his money the road over it was constructed, superior to the lien of a prior mortgagee. Id.

16. Where a railroad company executed a mortgage on its present and after-acquired property, to secure its bonds, and thereafter a contractor with the company erected a dock for the company on a part of the property covered by the mortgage, and filed a mechanics' lien for his pay, he is not entitled to priority of payment over the mortgage. Toledo, D. & B. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 905

17. A recorded mortgage given by a railroad company on its roadbed and other property creates a lien whose priority cannot be displaced thereafter directly by a mortgage given by the company, or indirectly by a contract between the company and a third party for the erection of buildings or other works of original construction. Id.

18. The equitable principles upon which the decisions rest applying to the payment, out of the proceeds of the sale of railroad property, of debts for operating expenses and repairs, are not applicable to claims for the original construction of a railroad while there was a subsisting mortgage upon it. Id.

2. When a Legislature has full power to create corporations, its Act recognizing as valid a de facto corporation, whether private or municipal, operates to cure all defects in steps leading up to the organization, and makes a de jure, out of what before was only a de facto, corporation. *Comanche County v. 1. Where damages for a tort have been assessed by a jury at an entire sum, the court, upon a motion for a new trial, cannot, according to its own estimate of the amount of damages which the plaintiff ought to have recovered, enter an absolute judgment for any other sum than that assessed by the jury. Kennon v. Gilmer, 110

2. The granting or refusal, absolute or conditional, of a rehearing in equity, as of a new trial at law, rests in the discretion of the court in which the cause has been heard or tried, and is not a subject of appeal. Roemer v. Neumann, 277

3. The statute of Tennessee forbidding the granting of more than two new trials in the same cause on the facts, but allowing more for errors of law, is not in conflict with U. S. Const. 14th Amend. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Woodson, 1082

2. A notary public has no authority to administer an oath to a deputy surveyor of the United States in reference to the manner in which he had discharged his duties as deputy surveyor, under the contract which is made part of the indictment in this case. United States v. Hall, 97

1. One who is to receive a certain share of the profits, and bear a like share of the losses, in the business of selling goods of a firm, is a partner. Paul v. Cullum, 480

2. The contribution of money or property by an incoming partner is not essential to the creation of a partnership. It is competent for the prior partners, in consideration of the new partner undertaking the entire charge and control of the business of the company, to give him an interest as partner in the property which is to constitute, at the outset, the whole capital of the partnership. Id.

3. A partner to whom is committed the entire direction and supervision of the partnership property can, in a general assignment of the partnership effects for the benefit of the firm creditors, represent another partner who has expressly authorized him to bargain, sell, hypothecate, and in every way to deal with, the partnership property. Such assignment executed by him binds the other partner. Id.

4. A mortgage made by a partner on his homestead, which was used to raise money by the firm of which he was a member to pay its debts and save its credit, is not fraudulent as to creditors of the firm. Rio Grande R. Co. v. Vinet, 488

5. The legal existence of a special partnership does not depend upon the notice of its formation; the only effect of failure to publish the required notice is that the partnership is to be deemed general. Tracy v. Tuffy, 579

6. The New York statute, in fixing the liability of a special partner on account of non-compliance with its provisions, does not change his special partnership into a general one, but simply makes him liable as a general partner to creditors. Abendroth v. Van Dolsen, 57

I. GRANTING.

1. Under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4915, the circuit court may adjudge that the applicant is entitled, according to law, to receive a patent for his invention or for any part thereof; and if the adjudication is in favor of the right of the applicant, it shall authorize the commissioner to issue the patent. Hill v. Wooster, 502

1148

2. No adjudication can be made in favor of the applicant unless the alleged invention for which a patent is sought is a patentable invention. Neither the Circuit nor the United States Supreme Court can overlook the question of patentability. Id.

II. DURATION; FOREIGN PATENTS.

3. Under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4887, a United States patent for an invention previously patented in a foreign country expires at the same time with the term limited by the foreign patent, or, if there be more than one foreign patent, at the same time with the one having the shortest time to run. Pohl v. Anchor Brewing Co. 953

4. The words "expiration of term," in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4887, relating to foreign patents, do not mean expiration of term through a forfeiture by breach of a condition, but mean expiration by lapse of time. Id.

5. The duration of a United States patent is not to be limited by any lapsing or forfeiture of any portion of the term of a foreign patent, by means of the failure to perform a condition subsequent, according to the foreign statute. Id.

6. A dealer residing in the United States cannot purchase in another country articles patented there, from a person authorized to sell them, and import them to and sell them in the United States, without the license of the owners of the United States patent. Boesch v. Gräff, 787

III. PATENTABILITY OF INVENTIONS.

7. A person, to be entitled to a patent, must have invented or discovered some new and useful art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or some new and useful improvement thereof; and it is not enough that a thing is new, in the sense that in the shape or form in which it is produced it has not been known, and that it is useful, but it must amount to an invention or discovery. Burt v. Ivory, 647; Hill v. Wooster, 508

8. If changes in old instrumentalities, to adapt them to the use contemplated, involve only the exercise of ordinary mechanical skill, they do not sanction a patent. Aron v. Manhattan R. Co. 272

9. A mere carrying forward, or more extended application, of an original idea,—a mere improvement in degree,—is not invention. Burt v. Ivory, 647

10. It is not invention to combine old devices into a new article, without producing any new mode of operation. Id.

11. The application of an old process or machine to a similar or analogous subject, with no change in the manner of applying it, and no result substantially distinct in its nature, will not sustain a patent, even if the new form of result has not before been contemplated. Howe Mach. Co. v. National Needle Co. 963

12. The application to the turning of machine awls and needles from metal, of mechanism old and familiar in the art of wood turning, is not invention, and is not patentable. Id.

13. It is not a patentable invention to add a lower compartment to a box creamery on legs. Hill v. Wooster, 502

14. Giving to oxygenated water a well-known rotary motion is not an exercise of inventive faculty. Marchand v. Emken, 382

15. A shifting device being old, its application to a fulling-machine for treating rawhides did not require the exercise of invention. Royer v. Roth, 322

16. There was nothing new or patentable in flexible or rigid doors, outside and inside, for grain cars, or in the use of outside and inside rigid doors in combination, the inside door filling only part of the opening. Watson v. Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co., 295

17. The employment of a diagonal brace to a track-scraper, to prevent lateral displacement, does not involve patentable novelty. Day v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co., 265

18. The improvement, if any, in the use of a circular clamp over a rectangular clamp, in an electric lamp, around the carbon rod, is only a question of degree in the use of substantially the same means. Brush v. Condit, 251

19. A patent cannot be upheld where it consists in a mere aggregation of parts, each to perform its separate and independent function substantially in the same manner as before combination with the other, and without contributing to a new and combined result. Watson v. Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co., 295

20. The Evory and Heston patent, 59,375, for shoes constructed with an extension gore flap on each side, involves no invention, but is a mere aggregation of old parts. Burt v. Evory, 647

21. Although a patentee is entitled to the merit of being the first to conceive of the convenience and utility of a gate opening and closing mechanism which can be operated efficiently by an attendant at a distance, his right to a patent must rest upon the novelty of the means he contrives to carry his idea into practical application. Aron v. Manhattan R. Co., 272

22. The claim for the invention of the clamp arrangement, in letters patent granted to Charles F. Brush, for improvement in electric lamps, was anticipated by that of Charles H. Hayes, made in June, 1876. Brush v. Condit, 251

23. Mechanism for opening and closing apertures distant from the operator, in which the devices used for the purpose are the mechanical equivalents of those employed in patent 288,494, for an improvement in railway-car gates, is old; and what the patentee did was to adapt well-known devices to the special purpose mentioned in the patent. Aron v. Manhattan R. Co., 272

24. Patent 273,569, granted to Charles Marchand, March 6, 1883, for an improvement in the manufacture of hydrogen peroxide, is invalid for want of novelty. Marchand v. Emken, 382

25. An invention is not concealed or used in secret because hidden from view by its position in the machinery in which it is used. Brush v. Condit, 251

IV. CONSTRUCTION; INFRINGEMENT.

26. The claim is a statutory requirement, prescribed for the purpose of making the patentee define precisely what his invention is, and should be construed in accordance with the plain import of its terms. Howe Mach. Co. v. National Needle Co., 968

27. A claim is to be construed in connection with the explanation contained in the specification, and it may be so drawn as in effect to make the specification an essential part of it; but the specification and drawings are usually looked at only for the purpose of better understanding the meaning of the claim, and not for the purpose of changing it. Id.

28. Where the patent is for a combination, it cannot be permitted to read into it any delicate adjusting apparatus not originally included in the claim. Id.

29. In construing a patent, it is necessary to consider the state of the art when the application for it was made. Burt v. Evory, 647

30. Where a patentee has modified his claim in obedience to the requirements of the patent office, he cannot have for it an extended construction which has been rejected by the patent office. Phanix Caster Co. v. Spiegel, 663

31. In a suit on a patent, a claim must be limited, where it is a combination of parts, to a combination of all the elements included in the claim as necessarily constituting that combination. Id.

32. In the Martin patent, 190,152, for casters, the words "rocker-formed collar bearing," describing one element of the combination, must be restricted, in view of the state of the art, to such a bearing resting on a collar beneath the floor-wheel housing as is shown in the specifications; and the patent is not infringed by the Yale caster, which has no equivalent for such "rocker-formed collar-bearing," and no opening in the housing from top to bottom, such as appears in the Martin patent. Id.

33. Where a patentee, after the rejection of his application, inserted in his specification a statement that his invention related to a new construction of lock-case, whereby it was made "to dispense with an extended bottom plate," he cannot contend that his specification and claims are to be interpreted so as to cover a construction which has an extended bottom plate. Roemer v. Peddie, 382

34. When a patentee, on the rejection of his application, inserts in his specification, in consequence, limitations and restrictions, for the purpose of obtaining his patent, he cannot, after he has obtained it, claim that it shall be construed as it would have been construed if such limitations and restrictions were not contained in it. Id.

35. After an action in equity for the infringement of letters patent has been heard and decided upon its merits, the plaintiff cannot file a disclaimer in court, or introduce new evidence upon that or any other subject, except at a rehearing granted by the court upon such terms as it thinks fit to impose. Roemer v. Neumann, 277

PAYMENT. See also SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, 1.

1. Bankers are not agents of the owner to receive payment of notes by reason simply of the fact that the notes were made payable at their bank; and moneys left with them to be used as payment are not thereby the moneys of the owner of the notes. Cheney v. Libby, 818

2. A promissory note does not discharge the debt for which it is given unless such be the express agreement of the parties; it only operates to extend the period for the payment of the debt. Segrist v. Crabtree, 125

3. If a sale is an unconditional one, and if a note is given and accepted as absolute payment, the original debt is extinguished, and the remedy of the seller is on the note. Id.

4. A credit or payment is to be applied to the one of two sums first due. McGillin v. Bennett, 422

5. Where a payment of a sum of money is to be made in land, and it becomes a cash payment by failure to deliver the deed, and at the same time another payment is to be made on the same matter in notes payable at a future day, and the notes are not given, which last payment is secured by a vendor's lien,—a credit must be first applied on the payment to be made in land, and not on the deferred payments to be evidenced by notes. Id.

6. Where a person is to pay an agreed sum of money by conveying a piece of land on a certain day, if he declines to make the conveyance or is unable to give a good title, such agreed sum, on that day, becomes payable in cash. Id.

PERJURY.

1. A defendant indicted for perjury cannot be held to be guilty, unless the oath in regard to which the perjury is charged was taken before an officer having authority to administer it. United States v. Hall, 97

2. The power of punishing a witness for testifying falsely in a judicial proceeding belongs peculiarly to the government in whose tribunals that proceeding is had. Thomas v. Loney, 949

3. A witness giving his testimony in a contested election case before a notary public, under authority of Congress, is accountable for the truth of his testimony to the United States only. Id.

PLEADING. See also EQUITY, 6; EVIDENCE, 38.

1. The allegation in a bill, that the record of a judgment as it stands is a gross fraud upon the judgment debtor, is limited to the particulars specified in the bill. Knox County v. Harshman, 586

2. A bill alleging the insolvency of a bank to the knowledge of its officers, and a wrongful neglect to disclose its insolvency to complainant; that by continuing in business it represented itself to be solvent; that complainant, on the faith of such representation and believing the bank solvent, deposited with it a draft; and that the next morning the bank closed its doors,—sufficiently alleges the insolvency and fraud of the bank. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston, 683

3. In an action under the New York statute, to render a special partner liable for the firm debts by reason of his failure to comply with the statute in reference to limited partnerships, the action being against all the members of the firm, it is sufficient to charge him, in the complaint, as a general partner, and it is not necessary to allege the special omissions which rendered him liable as such. Abendroth v. Van Dolsen, 57

4. If fraud is relied on, it is not sufficient to make the charge in general terms. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston, 683

5. A decree for a deficiency is a necessary incident of a foreclosure suit in equity, and may be granted under a prayer for general relief. Shepherd v. Pepper, 706

6. In a suit to set aside tax deeds as clouds on the title of lands, the allegation that the plaintiff is seised in fee simple is a sufficient allegation that he has possession as well as the title. Gage v. Kaufman, 725

7. Where the averment of diverse citizenship was not controverted by the answer, the averment must be taken as true, under the practice in Nebraska. Deputron v. Young, 923

8. Where the bill shows such laches upon the part of the plaintiff that a court of equity ought not to give relief, the defendant need not interpose a plea or answer, but may demur upon the ground of want of equity apparent on the bill itself. Bryan v. Kales, 829

9. A demurrer admits only allegations of fact, and not conclusions of law. Pennie v. Reis, 426

10. A demurrer does not admit that the construction of a statute set forth in the pleading demurred to is the correct one, or that the statute imposes the obligations or confers the rights which the pleading alleges. Id.

11. A demurrer cannot introduce, as its support, new facts which do not appear on the face of the bill, and which must be set up by plea or answer. Stewart v. Masterson, 114

12. Where there is matter properly pleaded in the bill, which is proper ground for equitable relief and which requires an answer or a plea, a demurrer to the whole bill ought to be overruled. Id.

13. Amendment to a cross-bill may be allowed at the hearing simply to enable the cross-complainant to avail itself of what has been alleged and proved by the original complainants, although thereby is presented a new and independent basis of relief. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Chicago Third Nat. Bank, 900

14. When the subject matter of an original bill filed by an infant was the title and ownership of property conveyed by a deed under which the plaintiff claimed title, and the allegations of a cross-bill related to that property, and demanded that the trust created by the deed be declared and ownership established under the trust, although the cross-bill alleged additional facts the subject matter of the cross-bill was germane to that of the original bill. Kingsbury v. Buckner, 1047

15. A cross-bill is proper whenever the defendants, or any or either of them, have equities arising out of the subject matter of the original suit which entitle them to affirmative relief which they cannot obtain in that suit. Id.

16. Where the law authorizes a defendant to plead several pleas, he may use each plea in his defense, and the admissions unavoidably contained in one cannot be used against him in another. Glenn v. Sumner, 801

PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

1. Where bonds of a company are transferred to a director by unfair means and in a clandestine manner, he cannot be regarded as a legal and equitable pledgee thereof. Washburn v. Green, 516

2. A pledge, in the legal sense, requires to be delivered to the pledgee. He must have the possession of it. Christian v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. 589

3. A declaration in a statute, that all the stock held by the State in a railroad company shall be pledged for the redemption of state certificates, and any dividend declared thereon shall be applied to pay the interest on said bonds, is only a promise that the stock shall be held and set apart for the payment of the bonds, and that the dividends shall be applied to the interest. It is no actual pledge. Id.

POLICE.

Where a statute for the pay of police officers provided that $2 a month be retained from the pay of each officer, for a fund, a certain sum of which should, on the death of each officer, be paid to his representatives, such fund, until such death, can be applied to a different purpose by the Legislature. Pennie v. Reis, 426

POSTOFFICE. See also ASSUMPSIT, 5, 6; INDICTMENT, ETC.

1. Where, in a contract for carrying the mails, places are designated as on the line of a mail route from one point to another and back, the contractor is required to return to the same places on his way back. He cannot return by a shorter route. United States v. Carr, 483

2. The postmaster-general may order an increase of service in carrying the mail, by enlarging the distance, by new route, or by requiring a greater number of trips between the terminal points, and by allowing therefor a pro rata increase on the contract pay. United States v. Barlow, 346

3. Under the proviso in the Act of April 7, 1880, limiting the discretion of the postmaster-general to expedite the service of carrying the mails to 50 per cent of the rate fixed in the original contract, the rate of pay established in the contract as originally let—not the amount of the pay expressed therein—is the basis or unit of computation for such increased service. Altman v. United States, 51

4. Forfeitures imposed by the postmaster-general for failure of the contractor to carry the mail within the prescribed time are within his discretion, and are not subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States. Id.

5. The embezzlement, by a person employed in a department of the postal service, of a letter intended to be conveyed by mail and containing an article of value, which came into the possession of such person, is made an offense against the United States by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5467, distinct from the offense of stealing such article; and the penalty is prescribed for such embezzlement by said section. United States v. Lacher, 1080

6. U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 3891, 5467, are to be considered together; and the offenses of secreting, embezzling, or destroying mail matter not containing articles of value, are punishable under the one, and that containing such articles under the other. Id.

7. Two classes of offenses were intended to be created by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5467,—one relating to the embezzlement of letters, etc., and the other to stealing the contents. Id.

POWERS.

1. In the case of a naked power to convey, not coupled with an interest, the law requires that every prerequisite to the exercise of the power should precede it. Deputron v. Young, 928

2. Where a will of a citizen of South Carolina, executed there, directed a power of appointment to be executed by the will of the person therein authorized to execute the power, he intended a will executed according to the laws of South Carolina. Blount v. Walker, 1086

3. The power given by a will to dispose of, by will, a bequest of three fourths of a bond and mortgage, the enjoyment of which for life is bequeathed to the donee of the power, is properly executed by the will of the donee, which, after referring to the bequest, devises and bequeaths the entire property and estate to which she is "in anywise entitled," to her husband. Lee v. Simpson, 1088

4. If the donee of a power intends to execute it, and the mode be in other respects unexceptionable, that intention, however manifested, whether directly or indirectly, positively or by just implication, will make the execution valid and operative. Id.

5. Three classes of cases have been held to be sufficient demonstrations of an intended execution of a power: (1) where there has been some reference in the will or other instrument to the power; (2) or a reference to the property which is the subject on which it is to be executed; (3) or where the provision in the will or other instrument executed by the donee of the power would have no operation except as an execution of the power. Id.

6. The words "in anywise entitled" are sufficient to cover not only property which a testatrix who was the donee of a power held in her own full right, but also property which she held in a limited right under her mother's will. Id.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY. See also EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 8.

An agreement by a grantee assuming a mortgage does not, without the mortgagee's assent, put the grantee and mortgagor in the relation of principal and surety towards the mortgagee, so that the latter, by giving time to the grantee, will discharge the mortgagor. Keller v. Ashford, 667

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

1. A confirmation of a Mexican grant of a tract with specified boundaries covered all the land within those boundaries, irrespective of quantity; and this, notwithstanding there appeared in the prior proceedings statements that the tract contained a certain amount, "a little more or less," which amount was very much less than that included within the boundaries. United States v. Hancock, 601

2. Where a decree gives with precision the boundaries of the tract to which a claim is confirmed, and has become final by stipulation of the United States and the withdrawal of their appeal therefrom, it is conclusive, not only on the question of title, but also as to the boundaries which it specifies. Id.

3. Where a survey was made in good faith and has been unchallenged for over fifteen years, whatever doubts may exist as to its correctness must be resolved in favor of the title as patented. Id.

PUBLIC LANDS. See also CONTRACTS, 28; COURTS, 87; EVIDENCE, 37; TAXES, 9, 10.

1. A patent passes the title of the United States to the land, not only as it was at the time of the survey, but as it is at the date of the patent, so that the United States does not retain any interest in any accretion formed between the survey and the date of the patent. Jefferis v. East Omaha Land Co., 872

2. After public lands have been entered at the land office and a certificate of entry obtained, they are private property, the government agreeing to make a conveyance as soon as it can, and in the mean time holding the naked legal fee in trust for the purchaser, who has the equitable title. Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Price County, 687

3. Until all the preliminary steps prescribed by law for the acquisition of the property are complied with, the settler does not obtain any title against the United States; and among these are entry of the land at the appropriate land office and payment of its price. Campbell v. Wade, 240

4. The withdrawal from sale by the government of lands previously opened for sale puts an end to proceedings instituted for their acquisition. Id.

5. Occupation and improvement of the tracts desired, with a view to preemption, though absolutely essential to that purpose, do not confer upon the settler any right in the land occupied, as against the United States, which impairs in any respect the power of Congress to withdraw the land from sale for the uses of the government, or to dispose of the same to other parties. Id.

6. The cancellation of a homestead entry after a subsequent grant to a railroad and the definite location of its line of road did not inure to the benefit of the railroad company, but the land reverted to the government, and became a part of the public domain, subject to appropriation by the first legal applicant. Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 363

7. A homestead entry of land embraced within the limits of a land grant afterwards made by Act of Congress to a railroad company excepted the land from the operation of the railroad grant. Id.

8. Lands originally public cease to be public after they have been entered at the land office and a certificate of entry has been obtained. Id.

9. Congress, by a grant of land to a railroad to aid in its construction, confers a present title to the designated sections along its route, with such restrictions upon their use and disposal as to secure them for the purposes of the grant. Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Price County, 687

10. Deficiencies arising in the designated or granted sections, before as well as after the date of a granting Act, may be supplied by selections from the indemnity lands, and patents issued for them. Id.

11. Indemnity lands are those which are, by the grant in aid of a railroad, allowed to be selected in lieu of parcels lost from the designated or granted lands by previous disposition or reservation. Id.

12. The owner of a military land warrant, who delivered it to the commissioner of the land office, with a direction that it be located upon certain swamp land in Illinois, it being so located, and who received the certificate of the register and receiver of the land office showing his right to a patent, had, prior to the issue of the patent, an equitable title to the land which excluded it from a grant to the State by Congress by the Swamp Land Act. Culver v. Uthe, 776

13. There is an implied license growing out of the custom of nearly a hundred years, that the public lands of the United States,—especially those in which the native grasses are adapted to the growth and fattening of domestic animals,—shall be free to the people who seek to use them, when left open and unclosed. Buford v. Houtz, 618

14. Plaintiffs engaged in stock raising on unoccupied public lands of the United States, although owning detached unclosed portions of such land, cannot by suit in equity enjoin defendants, owning none of such lands, from the use of such public lands for pasturing, on the ground that defendant's sheep pastured thereon will trespass and pasture on plaintiffs' unclosed lands. Plaintiffs cannot, by so excluding defendants, secure to themselves the exclusive right of pasturage on such public lands. Id.

15. Texas land certificates are chattels, and may be sold by parol agreement and delivered, whereby the purchaser acquires a right to locate the land and procure a patent in the name of the grantee, but for his own use, he becoming thereby the equitable owner of the land located. Miller v. Texas & P. R. Co. 487

16. A settler may abandon one location of land in Texas, and adopt another; and the land in the abandoned location then becomes public land subject to location by other parties. Id.

17. The failure of a prior locator to comply with the statute requiring the survey to be returned to the land office within eight months, under a penalty of being void, inures to the benefit of the State, and not to the benefit of a subsequent locator. Id.

18. A subsequent locator having actual notice of a prior location will be postponed to the superior rights of the prior locator, although the subsequent location has passed into a patent. Id.

RAILROADS. See also BONDS, 8; CORPORATIONS, 14.

1. The property of a railroad company is not held under any such trust to apply it to the payment of its debts as to restrict its use for any other lawful purpose, it matters not how meritorious the demand of the creditor may be. Fogg v. Blair, 721

2. The creditor of a railroad company must obtain a lien on the property of the company, or security in some other form, or he will have to take his chances with all other creditors to obtain payment in the ordinary course of legal proceedings for the collection of debts. Id.

3. The prohibition, in the Missouri State Constitution of 1865, of municipal subscriptions to the stock of, or loans of credit to, companies or corporations, without the previous assent of two thirds of the qualified voters at a regular or special election, had the effect to limit the future exercise of legislative power, but did not take away any authority granted before that Constitution went into operation. Scotland County v. Hill, 261

4. The Green Bay & Minnesota Railroad Company, a Wisconsin corporation, under the laws of that State, can receive only the lands necessary to such uses as are appropriate to the operations of its railroad. Case v. Kelly, 518

1. The object of recording a mortgage is to give notice to third persons. As between the parties thereto, a mortgage is just as effectual for all purposes without recording as with. Bacon v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 128

2. The omission of a wife to record her mortgage on her husband's property only deprives it of force as to third persons who at the time of its recording have perfected liens on the property of the husband. Bradley v. Claflin, 867

RECEIVERS.

1. Courts of equity may, in the absence of statutory rule, fix the compensation of their own receivers and that of counsel employed by them. Stuart v. Boulware, 568

2. Counsel fees are proper allowances to a receiver for counsel employed by him in the discharge of his duties. Id.

3. Wherever property subject to a lien has been brought within the domain of a court of equity, and a receiver of it is appointed, the rents and profits in the hands of the receiver will be applied, along with the corpus of the fund, to satisfy the lien, after paying charges, such as taxes and insurance. *Shepherd v. 2. The court may make nunc pro tunc entries to supply omissions in the record of what was done at the time of the proceedings. Wight v. Nicholson, 865

3. Where a person was convicted of embezzling letters, in the district court, and, pending a motion for new trial, the cause was transferred to the circuit court, where the motion was denied, and subsequently, in the district court, without entry of the order previously made remitting the cause to that court, he was sentenced to imprisonment,—the circuit court has power subsequently to enter the order nunc pro tunc upon its own motion and recollection, remitting the cause to the district court, according to the facts, to supply the omission to enter it previous to remitting the cause. Id.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

1. Under the statutes of Indiana, the proceedings of county commissioners in passing upon claims against a county are not a trial inter partes, and an appeal from their decision is tried by the circuit court of the county as an original cause. Hence the trial in the circuit court of the county is "the trial" of the case, before which at any time it may be removed into the circuit court of the United States, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 639, cl. 3. Delaware County v. Diebold Safe & L. Co. 674

2. The restriction that a plaintiff cannot prosecute a suit in the United States circuit court, where his assignors could not have prosecuted it because one of them is a citizen of the same State as the defendant, does not extend to suits removed to such courts from a state court. Id.

3. No amendment of the record can be made in the circuit court to show that the case was a proper one to have been removed from the state court. Orehore v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 144

4. A case is not, in law, removed from the state court, upon the ground that it involves a controversy between citizens of different States, unless at the time the application for removal is made the record upon its face shows it to be one that is removable. Id.

5. A state court is not bound to surrender its jurisdiction of a suit on a petition for its removal into the circuit court until a case has been made which on its face shows that the petitioner has a right to the transfer. Id.

6. The mere filing of a petition for the removal of a suit which is not removable does not work a transfer. To accomplish this, the suit must be one that may be removed, and the petition must show a right in the petitioner to demand the removal. Id.

7. If a suit entered upon the docket of the circuit court as removed was never, in law, removed from the state court, no amendment of the record, made in the former, can affect the jurisdiction of the latter, or put the case rightfully on the docket of the circuit court. Id.

8. If the case be not removed, the jurisdiction of the State court remains unaffected, and the jurisdiction of the federal court cannot attach until it becomes the duty of the state court to proceed no further. No such duty arises unless a case is made by the record that entitles the party to a removal. Id.

9. The case as made by the complaint, and as it stood at the time of the petition for removal, is the test of the right to remove the suit from a state to a federal court. Graves v. Corbin, 462

10. Under the Act of Congress of March 2, 1867, it is essential, in order to a removal of a cause from a state court to a United States court, where there are several plaintiffs or several defendants, that all the necessary parties on one side be citizens of the State where the suit is brought, and all on the other side be citizens of another State or States; and the proper citizenship must exist when the action is commenced, as well as when the petition for removal is filed. Young v. Ewart, 352

11. That one corporation is the only real defendant because the other defendant was not in existence at the time of the trespass complained of is a matter affecting the merits of a case, and not the jurisdiction, and cannot be tried on the petition to remove. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wangelin, 474

12. Where a suit is brought to reach the entire property of a limited partnership, and to declare certain judgments against the same void, there is in the suit but a single controversy between the plaintiff on the one side and the defendants who had adverse claims against the property on the other, although there are several defendants and various claims by the several defendants. Graves v. Corbin, 462

13. Separate defenses do not create separate controversies, within the meaning of the Removal Act. Id.

14. An action brought in a state court against two jointly for a tort cannot be removed by either of them into the circuit court of the United States, under the Act of March 3, 1875, chap. 137, § 2, upon the ground of a separable controversy between the plaintiff and himself, although the defendants have pleaded severally and the plaintiff might have brought the action against either alone. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wangelin, 474

15. The question whether there is separable controversy which will warrant a removal is to be determined by the condition of the record in the state court at the time of the filing of the petition for removal, independently of the allegations in that petition, or in the affidavit of the petitioner, unless the petition both alleges and proves that the defendants were wrongfully made joint defendants for the purpose of preventing a removal into the federal court. Id.

16. A declaration which charges two corporations with having jointly trespassed on plaintiff's land does not show a separable controversy between plaintiff and either defendant. Id.

1. Where the buyer is by contract bound to do anything as a condition, either precedent or concurrent, on which the passing of the property depends, the property will not pass until the condition be fulfilled, even though the goods may have been actually delivered into the possession of the buyer. Segrist v. Crabtree, 125

2. If a bill of sale is not given to pass the absolute title, but simply to enable vendee to use it in obtaining the goods, and it is agreed that the goods are to remain the property of the vendor until paid for according to the terms of the note, it will not transfer the title. Id.

3. If a note is taken as conditional payment only, it is prima facie evidence of payment so long as the seller holds it, and he cannot rightfully retake the goods while he retains the note. Id.

4. An express warranty of quality excludes any implied warranty that the articles sold were merchantable or fit for their intended use. De Witt v. Berry, 896

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

1. In a suit for goods destroyed by fire through defendant's negligence, a counterclaim for plaintiff's negligence causing the fire cannot include attorneys' fees and expenses in defending other suits brought against defendant by third parties for damages sustained from such fire. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Malin, 450

2. Reconvention, as the term is used in practice in Texas, means a cross-demand; and the title of Counterclaim, in the Revised Statutes of that State, is descriptive of such cross-action, which is more extensive than set-off or recoupment. Id.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

1. Where a contract is payable in money, the acceptance of numerous payments in current funds justifies the inference that current funds will be accepted for subsequent payments, and calls for a notice of intention to receive only coin or legal-tender paper for subsequent payments, and without such notice excuses failure to pay coin or legal tender on the very day the money is due, and will save the right of the other party to specific performance. Cheney v. Libby, 818

2. Even where time is made material by express stipulation, the failure of one of the parties to perform a condition within the particular time limited will not defeat his right to specific performance, if the condition be subsequently performed without unreasonable delay, and no circumstances have intervened that would render it unjust or inequitable to give such relief. Id.

3. After the surrender by defendant of notes due, and his formal notification to plaintiff that he regarded the contract as forfeited and would not receive any money from him, plaintiff was not bound, as a condition of his right to claim specific performance, to go through the useless ceremony of tendering payment of the notes. Id.

4. It is not absolutely necessary that plaintiff in a suit for specific performance should bring money into court for the defendant at the time he files his bill; his offer in the bill to perform all the conditions and stipulations of the contract is sufficient to give him a standing in court. Id.

5. A decree of specific performance ought not to become operative until plaintiff brings into court for the defendant the full amount necessary to pay what is due. Id.

1. A suit cannot be maintained in the circuit court against a State by a citizen thereof. North Carolina v. Temple, 849

2. A State cannot be sued by a citizen of another State or of a foreign state. Hans v. Louisiana, 842

3. A State cannot be sued in a circuit court of the United States by one of its own citizens, upon the ground that the case is one that arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States. Id.

4. The 11th Amendment of the Federal Constitution, which restrains the jurisdiction granted by the Constitution over suits against States, is limited to those suits in which the State is a real party or a party on the record. Lincoln County v. Luning, 766

5. Conceding state laws, contrary to which mandamus is asked to compel the levy of a tax to pay interest on state bonds, to be unconstitutional and void as impairing the obligation of a contract, that does not remove an objection that the suit is one against the State. Louisiana, New York Guaranty & I. Co. v. Steele, 891

6. Mandamus proceedings to compel the auditor of the State of Louisiana to require the sheriffs in the State to levy a tax to pay interest on state bonds, contrary to present state laws, is a suit against the State, within the prohibition of U. S. Const. 11th Amend. forbidding jurisdiction to federal courts of a suit against a State. Id.

7. A suit against the auditor of a State to compel the raising of a tax to pay interest on the state bonds is virtually a suit against the State. North Carolina v. Temple, 849

8. While the State cannot be compelled by suit to perform its contracts, any attempt on its part to violate property or rights acquired under its contracts may be judicially resisted; and any law impairing the obligation of contracts under which such property or rights are held is void. Hans v. Louisiana, 842

9. The State is an indispensable party to any suit in equity in which its property is sought to be taken and subjected to the payment of its obligations; and, as the State cannot be sued, such a suit cannot be sustained. Christian v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 589

10. A suit to effect a foreclosure and sale, or to obtain possession, of property belonging to the State, cannot be maintained, for the reason that in such a case the State is a necessary party, and it cannot be sued. Id.

11. A State may be sued by its own consent. It may, if it thinks proper, waive its privilege and permit itself to be made a defendant in a suit by individuals or by another State. Hans v. Louisiana, 842 ambiguous. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Thomas, 802; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Board of Levee Comrs., 808

2. In cases of doubt or uncertainty, acts in pari materia may be referred to, in order to discern the intent of the Legislature in the use of particular terms. Vane v. Newcombe, 810

3. Though penal laws are to be construed strictly, yet the intention of the Legislature must govern in the construction of penal as well as other statutes; and they are not to be construed so strictly as to defeat the obvious intention of the Legislature. United States v. Lacher, 1080

4. Statutes to prevent frauds on the revenue are to be fairly construed, so as to carry out the intention of the Legislature. United States v. Stowell, 555

5. The rule ordinarily followed in construing statutes is to adopt the construction of the courts of the country by whose Legislature the statute was originally adopted. In this case the court follows the construction of the State which was the source of the statute,—to wit, Massachusetts; not that of the State from which the statute was immediately taken,—to wit, California. Coulam v. Doull, 596

6. For the purpose of arriving at the true meaning of a statute, courts read with such stops as are manifestly required. United States v. Lacher, 1080

7. If there be any ambiguity in a section of the United States Revised Statutes, resort may be had to the original statute from which the section was taken, to ascertain what, if any, change of phraseology there is, and whether such change should be construed as changing the law. Id.

8. A previous statute will be held to be modified by a subsequent one, if the latter was plainly intended to cover the whole subject embraced by both, and to prescribe the only rules in respect to that subject that are to govern. Tracy v. Tuffy, 879

SUBROGATION.

1. In equity a creditor may have the benefit of any obligation or security given by the principal to the surety for the payment of the debt. Keller v. Ashford, 667

2. Under the civil law, obtaining in Louisiana, creditors may exercise all rights and actions of their debtor, with the exception of those that are exclusively attached to the person. The right of the creditor may be pursued in a suit in equity in the courts of the United States. New Orleans v. Christmas, 99

TAXES. See also CLOUD ON TITLE, 2; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 11-18.

1. The provision in U. S. Const. 14th Amend. that no State shall deny to any person the equal protection of the laws, does not prevent a State from adjusting its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways, or compel the States to adopt an iron rule of equal taxation. Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 892

2. The mode of taxation adopted by the State of New York in reference to its corporations, excluding trust companies and savings banks, does not operate in such a way as to tax shares of national banks at a greater rate than that imposed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens. Palmer v. McMahon, 773

3. The bonds or obligations of the United States for the payment of money cannot be the subject of taxation by a State. This inhibition upon the States cannot be evaded by any change in the mode or form of the taxation, provided the same result is effected. Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 1025

4. Capital of national and state banks invested in United States securities cannot be subjected to state taxation; but shares of bank stock may be taxed in the hands of their individual owners at their actual instead of their par value, without regard to the fact that a part or the whole of the capital of the corporation may be so invested. Palmer v. McMahon, 773

5. Under Acts permitting the deduction of debts from the value of all a person's taxable property, such deduction must be permitted from the value of national bank shares; but a statute is not void because it does not provide for a deduction; nor is the assessment void if deductions are not made, but voidable only. Individual instances of omissions or undervaluation cannot be relied on to invalidate an assessment. Id.

6. A State has no right to tax the property of the United States within its limits. Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Price County, 687

7. If no taxes were due upon which the lands could be sold, the plaintiff in an action to set aside tax deeds as a cloud on title is not bound to pay any taxes as a condition of relief. Gage v. Kaufman, 725

8. When the donee or purchaser of public lands has complied with the conditions upon the performance of which he is entitled to a patent and to their use, and the government has ceased to have any interest therein which will justify it in withholding a patent, he is the beneficial owner of the lands and they are subject to taxation as his property. Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Price County, 687

9. When a railroad has been built according to the terms of a present grant, the company has an indefeasible title to the granted lands designated along its route, and the lands are subject to taxation against the company, although patents for them have not been issued. Id.

10. No title to indemnity lands becomes vested in any company until the selections are made and they have been approved of, as provided by statute, by the secretary of the interior; until which time such indemnity lands are not subject to taxation. Id.

as in derogation of the sovereign and of the common right, and therefore not to be extended beyond the exact and express requirements of the language used, construed strictissimi juris. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Thomas, 302; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Board of Levee Comrs. 308

12. A provision in an Act incorporating a railroad company, that the company, its stock, railroad, and property "shall be exempt from taxation for a term of twenty years from the completion of said railroad to the Mississippi River, but not to extend beyond twenty-five years from the date of the approval of this Act," does not exempt such company or its property from taxation before said railroad is completed to the Mississippi River. Id.

13. U. S. Const. 14th Amend. does not prevent the classification of property for taxation, subjecting one kind of property to one rate of taxation, and another kind of property to a different rate, or distinguishing between franchises, licenses, and privileges, and visible and tangible property, and between real and personal property. Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 1025

14. Where a state statute imposes a tax upon the "corporate franchise or business" of a company, and reference is only made to its capital stock and dividends for the purpose of determining the amount of the tax to be exacted each year, this is not a tax on the capital stock or property of the company, but upon its corporate franchise, and is not, therefore, subject to the objection that it is a tax on United States securities, although a portion of its capital stock is invested in such securities. Id.

15. By the term "corporate franchise or business," in a statute taxing such franchise, is meant the right or privilege of being a corporation,—that is, of doing business in a corporate capacity. Id.

16. The taxation of a corporate franchise has no limitation but the discretion of the taxing power, and its value is not measured like that of property, but may be fixed at any sum that the Legislature may choose. Such tax cannot be affected in any way by the character of the property in which its capital stock is invested. Id.

17. An assessment of a tax of 8 mills upon the nominal or face value of corporate securities, instead of the actual value, is not a discrimination which the State is not competent to make, where all corporate securities are subject to the same regulation, and does not violate U. S. Const. 14th Amend. Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 892; Chester v. Pennsylvania, 896

18. A corporation is not taxed for property it does not own, where, as the debtor of its bondholders, holding money in its hands for their use,—namely, the interest to be paid,—it is merely required to pay out of this fund the proper tax due on the security. The tax is on the bondholder, not on the corporation. Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 892

19. Telegraph companies which have accepted the provisions of the Act of Congress of July 24, 1866 (U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5268–5269), cannot be taxed by a State for any messages, or receipts arising from messages, from points within the State to points without, or to points without the State to points within, but such taxes may be levied upon all messages carried and delivered exclusively within the State. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Seay, 409

20. The principle that a tax title must be held good until it is annulled in a direct action applies only as to those titles that are bona fide, and are acquired without fraud, or that are real and not simulated. Mendenhall v. Hall, 1012

21. Where a mortgagor who has agreed not to sell or encumber the property to the prejudice of the mortgage has fraudulently combined with his brother to defeat the mortgage lien by means of a sale for taxes due from the mortgagor, at which sale the brother was to bid in the property, in his own name, for the benefit of the mortgagor, it is not necessary that the mortgagee, in order to maintain a suit to enforce his lien, should tender the amount of the taxes, with interest thereon, the nonpayment of which by the mortgagor had caused the sale to the prejudice of the mortgagee. The Louisiana constitutional provision that "no sale of property for taxes shall be annulled for any informality in the proceedings until the price paid, with 10 per cent interest, be tendered to the purchaser," has no application to such a case. Id.

22. In Nebraska a tax deed not executed by the treasurer under his seal of office is void. Deputron v. Young, 928

23. An Arkansas tax deed is void where the land was sold for taxes on a day not authorized by law. Redfield v. Parks, 827

The Act of the Legislature of Utah of 1878 declaring that the auditor of public accounts shall be elected by the voters of the Territory is void so far as it is in conflict with the organic Act of Sept. 9, 1850, creating the Territory of Utah, which provides that the governor, with the consent of the Legislative Council, shall appoint such officer. Id.

TRADEMARK.

1. One has no right to appropriate as a trademark a sign or a symbol, or a name which, from the nature of the fact it is used to signify, others may employ with equal truth, and therefore have an equal right to employ, for the same purpose. Corbin v. Gould, 611
2. Where the labels of complainants and defendants are so entirely dissimilar that one cannot readily be mistaken for the other, and a mere glance is sufficient to distinguish them, and there is no more similarity between them than is to be found ordinarily between tea labels, the fact that the word "Tycoon" is found in both of them does not make a case of infringement of a trademark. Id.
3. A word such as "Tycoon," which has been for many years in general and common use as a term descriptive of a class of teas introduced into the American market, belongs to the public as the common property of the trade, and therefore is not subject to appropriation by any person as a trademark. Id.

TREATIES.

1. The treaty power of the United States extends to all proper subjects of negotiation between our government and the governments of other nations. De Geofroy v. Riggs, 642

TRIAL. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 2; CONTEMPT, 6.

1. The restoration of record titles, where the records have been burned, is a matter essentially of equitable cognizance; and a statute providing therefor is not unconstitutional because it does not provide for trial by jury. Gormley v. Clark, 909
2. A federal court is not required to submit a special verdict, as provided by the rules of practice in the State. United States Mut. Accident Assn. v. Barry, 60
3. The judge, in submitting a case to the jury, may comment upon the evidence and express his opinion upon the facts; and the expression of such an opinion, when no rule of law is incorrectly stated, and all matters of fact are ultimately submitted to the determination of the jury, cannot be reviewed on writ of error. California Ins. Co. v. Union Compress Co. 780
4. The Act of Congress of June 1, 1872, § 5 (now U. S. Rev. Stat. § 914), in respect to following state practice by federal courts, was not intended to fetter the judge in the personal discharge of his accustomed duties, or to trench upon the common-law powers with which in that respect he is clothed. United States Mut. Accident Assn. v. Barry, 60
5. It cannot be permitted that, after the case has gone to a hearing, testimony submitted to the jury, and a verdict rendered, a party, for the first time, shall state a reason for his objection to that evidence which would make good the objection. Patrick v. Graham, 460

6. Where the evidence as to the boundary line of land is conflicting, in the absence of an official survey the intention of the parties is a question for the jury. McKey v. Hyde Park, 860
7. It was for the jury to say whether a conversation between a resident engineer and one of the plaintiffs in respect to piling, in which the former said (in answer to the question by the latter whether plaintiffs would be paid for it) that the chief engineer "would do what was right," was with a contractual intent and was a contract, or not. Henderson Bridge Co. v. McGrath, 934
8. Whether the facts proved are sufficient to explain the non-action of the plaintiff, and to negative the presumption of a dedication or not, is a question for the jury. McKey v. Hyde Park, 860
9. The question whether a note is given and accepted in payment for goods sold is for the jury. Segrist v. Crabtree, 125
10. The question whether the stewardess of a steamship is a fellow servant with the porter and carpenter is for the court, and not for the jury. Quebec Steamship Co. v. Merchant, 656
11. Instructions to the jury, not based upon any evidence, and having no evidence to support them, are erroneous. Keyser v. Hitz, 531
12. It is not error to refuse an instruction requested, where the court has already fully instructed the jury upon the subject. Ormsby v. Webb, 805
13. Refusal to give instructions to the jury as requested cannot avail the plaintiff in error, where the substance of the instructions refused was contained in the charge subsequently given by the court. Anthony v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 301
14. It is proper for the circuit court to direct a verdict for the plaintiff, where there is no question of fact for the jury, and where the defendant does not ask to go to the jury. Robertson v. Edelhoff, 477
15. Where the court would deem it its duty to set aside a verdict for plaintiff if given by a jury, on account of the want of sufficient evidence, the court is not bound to submit the case to the jury, but may direct a verdict for defendant. Gunther v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 857
16. In an equity suit the court may disregard the verdict and findings of a jury upon issues of fact submitted to them, either by setting them or any of them aside, or by letting them stand and allowing them more or less weight in its final hearing and decree, according to its own view of the evidence in the cause. Idaho & O. Land Imp. Co. v. Bradbury, 433
17. Where the jury were unable to agree, and returned into court, and, by polling them, it appeared that they were agreed upon a verdict of guilty under the first and second counts of the indictment, but could not agree as to the third and fourth counts; and, the jury having been again sent out, the court permitted a nolle prosequi to be entered upon the third and fourth counts; and the jury, upon being informed of this, returned a verdict of guilty upon the remaining counts,—Held, that this was a mere

4. U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5511, 5514, were made for the security and protection of elections held for representatives or delegates in Congress, and do not impair or restrict the power of the State to punish fraudulent voting in the choice of its electors. Id.

WAR.

No civil liability attached to officers or soldiers for an act done, in accordance with the usages of civilized warfare, in our late civil war, under and by military authority of either party. Freeland v. Williams, 198

WATER COMPANIES. See also CONTRACTS, 11.

1. A city's resolutions of acceptance of waterworks is not a guaranty to bondholders that the water company would thereafter perform its contract for furnishing water in the quantity and of the quality called for by the ordinance. Farmers Loan & T. Co. v. Galesburg, 573

2. Although purchasers of the bonds of a water company were influenced to purchase them by the resolution of a city to accept the waterworks, and by letters from officers and citizens of the city, yet the city was not thereby estopped, on failure of the company to fulfill its contract, from refusing to pay rental for the hydrants, which, by the terms of the mortgage given by the company to secure the bondholders, was to be applied to pay interest on the bonds, or from having the contract canceled. Id.

3. Where a city has contracted to sell the old water mains to a water company to be used in supplying water, the city has the right, upon the failure of the company to comply with the contract, after ample time given, to retake possession of such mains for the use of the city, to protect the city from fire. Id.

WATERS AND WATERCOURSES. See also BOUNDARIES, 2.

1. A riparian proprietor of land bordering upon a running stream has a right to the flow of its waters as a natural incident to his estate, and they cannot be lawfully diverted against his consent. Sturr v. Beck, 761

2. A settler whose homestead entry of public land has been made over a year, and who has been in possession for three years, is a riparian proprietor of the land, as to another person who subsequently locates a water right on the land. Id.

3. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2389, as to rights to the use of water, was rather a voluntary recognition of a pre-existing right of possession, constituting a valid claim to its continued use, than the establishment of a new one. Id.

4. Alluvion is an addition to riparian land,

WILLS—WRIT AND PROCESS.

made by the water to which the land is contiguous, so gradually and imperceptibly that, though the witnesses may see from time to time that progress has been made, they could not perceive it while the process was going on. Jefferis v. East Omaha Land Co. 872

5. A person whose land is bounded by a stream of water which changes its course gradually by alluvial formations will still hold by the same boundary, including the accumulated soil, and is without remedy for his loss by the same means. Id.

WILLS. See also POWERS, 2, 3, 6.

1. A court is authorized to put itself in the position occupied by a testator, in order, in view of the circumstances then existing, to discover from that standpoint what the testator intended by his will. Lee v. Simpson, 1088

2. The probate of a will in North Carolina established that the will was executed according to the law of that State, but did not establish that the will was executed according to the law of South Carolina, nor that it was a good execution of a power of appointment given by the will of a citizen of South Carolina. Blount v. Walker, 1086

WITNESSES.

1. One is a competent witness who has no interest adverse to either party, and whose interest in the property is recognized by all the parties. The fact that she is a party to the suit does not, of itself, disqualify her as a witness. Kingsbury v. Buckner, 1047

2. Under the Illinois Act of Feb. 19, 1867, a husband was competent to testify for or against his wife in cases where the litigation was concerning the separate property of the wife. Id.

3. The Pennsylvania statute, that a party may examine the adverse party "as under cross-examination," does not apply to suits in equity in the United States court. Dravo v. Fabel, 421

4. Before former declarations of a witness can be used to impeach or contradict him, his attention must be called to those declarations, with particularity as to time, place, and circumstances, so that he can deny or explain them. Ayers v. Watson, 378

5. Where three trials of the same case have been had, in each of which the same deposition of the same witness has been given in evidence, in the taking of which he was cross-examined, and on those trials no reference was made to a former deposition of his in another suit, nor any attempt to call his attention to it, and by his death subsequently he is placed beyond the power of explanation, then, on a fourth trial of the case, contradictory declarations of his in such former deposition cannot be used to impeach his testimony. Id.

6. Where the plaintiff in a federal court uses the depositions of defendant, taken by plaintiff "as under cross-examination," under a state statute, he makes defendant his own witness, and, though not concluded by the evidence, he cannot contend that defendant is unworthy of belief. Dravo v. Fabel, 421

WRIT AND PROCESS. See also COURTS, 1; INFANTS, 2.

1. By the statute of Missouri the clerk of the county is made the agent of the county for the purpose of receiving service of process against it; and service upon him is legal and sufficient service upon the county. Knox County v. Harshman, 586

2. The neglect of the clerk of a county in communicating the fact of service upon him of a summons against the county does not affect the validity of the service or of the judgment. Id.

3. An officer's return of the service of a summons, if false, is not a ground for review of the judgment in equity. Id.

4. Where the libelee—a foreign corporation—had, in compliance with the law of Louisiana, appointed an agent at New Orleans, on whom legal process might be served, and was there served upon him, this is good service in an action at law, and is equally good in admiralty. Re Louisville Underwriters, 991
